SHENANDOAH COURT CONDEMNS CHANGES MADE IN AIRSHIP

Reduction in Number of Her Gas Valves Is Held to Have Been Error of Judgment

AND A FACTOR IN DISASTER

PERSONNEL IS PRAISED

Lansdowne Is Cleared—He Was 'Fully Consulted,' It Is Stated.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—That the changes in the gas-cell system of the dirigible Shenandoah may have been an important contributing factor to the disaster in which that airship was lost over Ohio last September is strongly intimated in the report made public today of the Naval Court of Inquiry, headed by Rear Admiral Hilary P. Jones, which has spent three months investigating the accident.

Final destruction of the ship is declared by the court to have been due primarily to "large, unbalanced, extensive aerodynamic forces arising from great velocity currents," but gas pressure, due to altitude and rate of rise, may well have reached "values sufficiently high to produce some damage" to the Shenandoah's structure, in the opinion of the court. The exact nature and extent of this damage were not ascertainable, the court asserts, but was probably not sufficient to have endangered the ship under "normal" operating conditions.

The change in the Shenandoah that resulted from the reduction in the number of her gas valves is declared by the court to have been "inadvisable." The urging of this change by the late Commander Lansdowne of the Shenandoah, the recommendation for its approval by the commanding officer at Lakehurst, and the final approval of it as an experimental installation by direction of the Chief of the Bureau of Naval Aeronautics, Rear Admiral Moffett, are regarded by the court of inquiry—when viewed in the light of subsequent events—as "errors of judgment."

But the recommendations for this change are declared by the court to have been made after "full consideration" by the "most expert" officers of the navy in matters of design and operation of rigid airships and did not, in any way, involve negligence or culpability, in the opinion of the court.

"The disaster," the court asserts, "is part of the price which must inevitably be paid in the development of any new and hazardous art."

Whether the Shenandoah, if entirely intact and undamaged, would have broken under the forces existing at the time of the disaster, or whether prior minor damage due to gas pressure was a determining factor in the final breakup of the airship, the report says, "are matters this court is unable to definitely determine."

The court also went on record in opposition to flights such as the Shenandoah made, which was only partly a "military" mission, and largely in response to requests to have the airship visit State fairs.

"Such movements," the court recommended, "should be limited to essentially naval and military operations, in so far as possible, especially in case of new and experimental types."

No blame is attached to any one by the court for the accident. Officers and men who lost their lives are declared to have done so in line of duty and not as the result of misconduct. The measures taken by the late Commander Lansdowne are declared by the court to have accorded with the best established practice and the conduct of every one aboard was "deserving of the highest praise."

Commander Lansdowne was entirely justified in starting from Lakehurst at the time chosen, the report says, and weather reports indicated nothing that would render the voyage unsafe. But a more extensive meteorological service which would require more weather stations and more frequent broadcasting of reports, the court asserts, probably "would greatly have contributed to safe navigation of the Shenandoah on this trip."

FINDINGS OF THE COURT.

The court having thoroughly inquired into all the facts and circumstances connected with the loss of the U. S. S. Shenandoah, and having considered the evidence adduced, finds as follows:

I. Matters entirely antecedent to the inception of last trip of Shenandoah but having a material bearing on this inquiry.

FACTS.

1. The design of the Shenandoah was begun under the cognizance of the Bureau of Construction and Repair in 1919. When the Bureau of Aeronautics was created and organized in 1921 all matters connected with the design and construction of the airship were transferred to that bureau.
2. At the request of the Bureau of Aeronautics the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics appointed a technical committee of five, composed of scientists and engineers of national reputation, to examine the design, methods and assumptions used, as well as the actual design of the Shenandoah. This committee after prolonged study completely approved the design of the airship as prepared.
3. The airship was built at the United

Briton Sees World Unfit For Higher Education Level

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—Serious congestion in the ranks of white collar workers would result if the general average of intelligence were raised 10 per cent., Professor McDuff, a lecturer at Armstrong College, warned the Eugenics Educational Society at its meeting in London today.

"The world," he said, "is not organized or prepared for a much higher level of intelligence than it already has." He declared that even the small percentage of children who go through secondary schools have great difficulty in getting suitable employment in which they can use their higher education.

Educators were urged to abandon the white-collar ideal in education for the "barekneed" ideals of the Boy and Girl Scout movements.

230 HURT IN CRASH OF PASADENA STAND

WOMAN DIES NEAR SCENE

Another Falls From a Nearby Building and Is Killed—Two of Injured May Die.

PASADENA, Cal., Jan. 1 (AP).—A day of roses and joy ended in sorrow for 235 persons who were precipitated into a tangled mass of wreckage when a temporary private grand stand collapsed during the parade of the Tournament of Roses here today.

More than 30 cases of serious injuries were treated in the operating room of the Pasadena Hospital and 200 others received attention. Of these 100 left after first aid and went to their homes.

A few blocks distant from the scene of the tragedy a woman fell from the top of a building while viewing the parade and was killed. She was Mrs. C. W. Bowen of Pasadena.

Mrs. Caroline Sherman, 35, of Long Beach, Cal., died of cerebral hemorrhage caused by the shock of witnessing the stand collapse.

Mrs. Montague Glass, Pasadena, wife of the author, sustained minor injuries. Her mother, Mrs. T. Patterson, and daughter Betty, aged 9, were slightly hurt.

Howard Bann, Cincinnati, bruised back.

Mrs. Alva W. Chaplin, Detroit, lacerated leg.

Mrs. Leroy Weir, Illinois, city unknown, badly bruised.

Mrs. William Spooner, Oak Park, Illinois, chest bruised and shock.

Mrs. Ida Harris, Waltham, Mass., broken wrist and leg injuries.

Mrs. Herbert Lockwood, Cleveland, Ohio, broken ankle.

Mrs. C. W. Gabriel, Cleveland, Ohio.

Mrs. M. Spelletich, Davenport, Iowa, fractured ankle.

Mrs. Olga Didonoto, Detroit, legs injured.

As the miles-long floral pageant neared its end a frenzied big black horse, throwing its rider from the line of parade, crushed through the crowd and seriously injured two men.

The collapse of the stand came without warning. Witnesses said it started to sway with a groaning noise and a moment later collapsed, throwing its human load of nearly 500 persons into a tangled mass below. Great confusion reigned for several minutes until the cooler heads in the crowd organized the rescue. The parade was halted temporarily and a general call was sent out for ambulances. In the meantime every form of conveyance in the vicinity was impressed into service and the injured were started toward the receiving hospital.

Streets near the line of parade had been roped off and automobiles were not allowed to enter them. As a result only few cars could be had at first to convey the injured persons.

CAROL'S ABDICATION STIRS WIDE GOSSIP, NOT ALL ROMANCE

VIENNA, Jan. 1.—The public here is mystified both by Crown Prince Carol's renunciation of his right to the Rumanian throne and by the quick acceptance by King Ferdinand.

In an effort to supply an explanation of these actions, which the communiqué does not give, all sorts of reasons are being advanced. The renunciation is attributed on one hand to Carol's loyalty to his divorced morganatic wife and on the other hand is connected with a recent scandal in military aviation, while some think it is a combination of these, plus the bad blood known to exist between King Ferdinand and his eldest son.

The romantic version, which naturally is the favorite here, is based on these facts:

Carol, during the war, fell in love and married Zizi Lambrino, the daughter of a Rumanian officer, and reputed to be one of the prettiest girls in Bucharest. The royal family finally succeeded in getting the marriage nullified in 1920, providing the bride with handsome compensation, and married Carol the following year to Princess Helen of Greece. Carol, however, never really abandoned his first wife, with whom he has had three children, who of course do not enjoy royal prerogatives. It is believed that his renunciation will be followed by a divorce from Princess Helen and his remarriage to Zizi. She is no longer in Bucharest, and her whereabouts are unknown.

Resented Action in Plane Scandal.

The aviation scandal enters the situation in this way:

A number of airplanes bought some time ago from France were found to be in bad condition, causing several accidents. The officers purchasing and inspecting the planes were court-martialed and disgraced for graft. Carol, who was the head of military aviation, was never openly implicated in the scandal, but when he heard of the action taken—he was absent from Rumania—he recently wrote demanding the reinstatement of the officers, which was refused.

Two opposing conclusions are drawn from this—he himself was so compromised as to be forced to abdicate, or he was so angered by the refusal to grant his request in favor of the condemned subordinates, that he determined to uphold them at the cost of the Crown.

The relations between King Ferdinand and Carol have long been notoriously strained, their temperaments, which are strikingly similar, and their desires, which are frequently different, leading to continual clashes. Consequently it is thought that the King, who is 60 years old, welcomed the opportunity to replace his troublesome son, aged 33, with his infant grandson.

Carol has also been often at loggerheads with Queen Marie.

He is not especially popular in Rumania, but both the aviation and love affairs have gained him some sympathy.

King Reads Letter to Council.

It is reported that the contents of Carol's brief letter abdicating leads to the belief that it was not voluntary, but was forced by the royal family. The King opened the Crown Council by reading this letter, which is said to run as follows:

"I have irrevocably decided to renounce all my rights as heir to the Rumanian throne and as a member of the royal family. I bind myself during six years not to return to Rumania, and also after the lapse of this period never to tread Rumanian soil again except with the permission of the King and the Rumanian Parliament."

The last sentence increases the sur-

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—Whether the shred of a woman whose deranged brain continually forces her racked body to shrink from imaginary dangers, and who now is in the Mommsen Sanitarium in Berlin, is the Grand Duchess Anastasia, the fourth child of former Czar Nicholas, only two living people could tell.

They are Dr. Rudness, former physician to the Czar and now a refugee in Berlin, and an unnamed woman attendant to the patient who is known as Frau Tschaikovsky. And these two people are bound to silence by a most solemn oath. To THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent they refused to answer questions of any kind, and they have steadfastly maintained this attitude for many months.

Dr. Reinhardt, Director of the Mommsen Sanitarium, told THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent that his patient was an extraordinary one, though he was unacquainted with her identity.

When admitted to his institution her name was given as Anastasia von Tschaikovsky, born in St. Petersburg, June 8, 1901. The Czar's fourth daughter, bearing the name of Anastasia, was born in St. Petersburg on June 1, 1901.

"My duty is to try to cure patients, and their identity is unessential," said Dr. Reinhardt.

"But there is something about Frau Tschaikovsky that leads us to believe that she is no ordinary Russian refugee. Her condition has greatly improved during the past few days.

None of the Russian colony asserting intimate knowledge of the Russian reigning family will confirm or deny that Dr. Reinhardt's patient is the Grand Duchess long believed to have been murdered with the rest of her family in Ekaterinburg in 1918.

EXCHANGE GREETINGS WITH LONDON ON AIR

REBROADCASTING PICKED UP

France Hears McCormack—Other Countries to Be Heard From in World-Wide Test.

The first attempt to hold a world-wide New Year's celebration by radio was made last night. New York and London exchanged New Year's greetings and musical entertainment by transoceanic super-broadcasting, and efforts were made to rebroadcast the program, not only from coast to coast in the United States, but also throughout the British Isles and the Continent of Europe, South America, and as far East as Hawaii.

By midnight wireless messages, cablegrams and telegrams, received at Station WJ on West Forty-second Street, showed that the experiment had been a partial success. Americans in twenty-nine States, as far west as California and even in the distant Northwest and Southwest, reported hearing music broadcast from London.

Heard in Paris and Bermuda.

Parts of the American program were heard in London, Paris, Buenos Aires, Havana and Bermuda, as well as everywhere in the United States. Paris heard John McCormack sing from the Victor studio, in West Forty-third Street, and rebroadcast his voice to radio fans elsewhere in France. England heard a symphony orchestra broadcast from Schenectady, N. Y. Havana heard American music and news dispatches clearly, and "got" London as relayed through New York, though with "periodic fading out." Amateurs in Buenos Aires heard the program from New York, but not clearly because of static, and the S. S. Montebello of Peru also received it.

Thus virtually the entire Western world was linked together for a few minutes by invisible strands. Word was awaited early this morning to see whether the Orient had participated in the radio party. An attempt was made to rebroadcast the program from the Pacific Coast to Hawaii, but reports on this were delayed.

The program which America sent through the ether to the rest of the world included songs by John McCormack and Lucrezia Bori, hymns on the carillon bells of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, Associated Press news dispatches from all over the world, and "international New Year's greetings," extended by Consuls General of various countries in New York.

"Big Ben" Not Heard.

London was to have sent us the tolling of midnight by "Big Ben" at Westminster Abbey in return for our carillon music, but unfavorable atmospheric conditions prevented America from hearing the famous timepiece. Had conditions been better, this would have been heard at 7 P. M. (Eastern Standard Time). Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, chief broadcasting engineer of the Radio Corporation of America, announced that the signals received from England were too weak for the American stations to attempt to rebroadcast them.

At 7:30 P. M. atmospheric conditions had improved, and the American stations rebroadcast New Year's greetings from London and music from the Club Ciro at Charing Cross for about twenty minutes.

Listeners here heard the radio announcer in London say:

"This is 2LO [the British Broadcasting Company station] calling America and sending New Year's greetings. We have received word that the American stations are rebroadcasting this program, and we hope that it is being relayed successfully."

Undulating Sound Waves.

The music then came in and was recognized as "When You and I Were Seventeen." Both the words of the announcement and the strains of the song came over the air in peculiar, undulating sound waves, which gave one the impression of being at the ocean shore watching huge waves break on the beach in regular time beats, or of being on a ship at sea in heavy weather.

Reports from different parts of the country indicated that the London program was heard with different degrees of clarity in different places, with no apparent relation between closeness to New York and ease in hearing.

Late last night Station KGO, in Oakland, Cal., reported that it was picking up the London program and was rebroadcasting it. This completed the chain of nine radio stations throughout the country which engaged in the feat.

Previous reports from radio fans included a message from Amarillo, in the Panhandle district of Texas, three nights' ride from New York, saying

COOLIDGES GREET NEW YEAR THRONG AT BRILLIANT FETE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—In keeping with the tradition established in Washington's day and made more democratic by President Jackson, President and Mrs. Coolidge today held the New Year reception, greeting the members of the Cabinet, the diplomats in their colorful uniforms, the Justices of the Supreme Court, the Senators and Representatives of Congress, the leaders of the army and navy, and men, women and children of the nation's citizenry.

This is the only day in the year when the general public can go to the White House without an invitation and pay their respects to the Chief Executive and his wife.

The reception to the public, which followed the welcome extended to diplomats and others, began at 1 o'clock and within a little more than an hour 3,130 had exchanged New Year's greetings with the head of the nation.

Mrs. Coolidge was most gracious to the children and frequently had a personal remark for some tot who appeared startled by his surroundings. Among the guests were many of the city's newsboys.

Christmas greens were the only adornment of the White House. During the reception the Marine Band, in two sections, played almost continuously.

Trumpets Herald the Event.

At 11 o'clock a fanfare of trumpets announced the presence of the President and Mrs. Coolidge, who walked hurriedly to the Blue Room, accompanied by the military and naval aids who made the presentations. The members of the Cabinet were the first to be received, followed by the Director of the Budget, the diplomatic corps and the Director General of the Pan-American Union.

By virtue of his rank as dean of the diplomatic corps, Señor Don Juan Riano y Gayangos, Chamberlain to the King of Spain and Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary, and his staff had the honor of leading the procession of diplomats through the Blue Room.

Then followed the Ambassador of Chile, whose country is so much in the limelight over the Tacna-Arica dispute; the Baron de Cartier de Marchienne, Ambassador from Belgium; Sir Esme Howard of Great Britain and the other diplomats in the order of their precedence.

Chief Justice Taft, who as President had kept the New Year's tradition, and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, the Presiding Judge and Associate Judges of the Court of Customs Appeals, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the Chief Justice and the Assistant Justices of the Court of Claims, and the Chief Justice and Assistant Justices of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia were next in line.

They were followed by Senators and Representatives in Congress, the Librarian of Congress, Army, Navy and Marine Corps officers, and the staff of the Commanding General of the District Militia. Then came officers of the Coast Guard, the Public Health Service and the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and bureau chiefs of the Government offices.

The Society of the Cincinnati led the section for patriotic organizations, followed in order by the Aztec Club of

POLICE CHEER NEW CHIEF

Commissioner Says No Interference With Duty Will Be Tolerated.

ASKS AID TO KEEP PLEDGE

GETS BADGE FROM ENRIGHT

Crowd Welcomes Him on Visit to Headquarters—To Name Deputies in Few Days.

George V. McLaughlin, former State Superintendent of Banks, on assuming office yesterday afternoon as Police Commissioner, pledged himself to give New York adequate protection from the criminal element, and to see that the city would be free from commercialized vice. He also promised that he would tolerate no interference with the members of the force in the performance of their duties, and asked for the cooperation of the police and the people in carrying out these pledges.

Mr. McLaughlin's promises were contained in a typewritten statement of less than 200 words which he had brought with him to Police Headquarters a few minutes after he had been formally sworn in by Mayor James J. Walker at the City Hall. He made the statement public shortly after he had made a brief address to all the Captains, Inspectors and Deputy Chief Inspectors of the force in the police trial room, in which, after acknowledging cheers from the gathering, he informed them that he was about to cover his attitude toward his new post through the statement he would give to the press.

The Commissioner walked briskly back to his office, where he had difficulty in finding his overcoat containing copies of the statement. He had dropped it on a chair before going to the trial room.

New Commissioner's Pledge.

When the overcoat was found he gave out the statement, which read as follows:

The thought in my mind as I assume the office of Police Commissioner is to give the City of New York an efficient administration.

The people of the city are entitled to adequate protection of their lives and property, and to expect that the community in which they live will be free from commercialized vice in so far as it is possible for a competent, intelligent and faithful police force to accomplish that end.

Any changes in personnel that may be necessary will be determined in the light of these important objectives.

I firmly believe that the members of the police force are only too willing to give the best that is in them, provided, first, that they have the assurance that they will receive fair play, and, secondly, that no interference with them in the performance of their police duties will be tolerated.

I pledge to the people of the City of New York and the members of the Police Department a firm adherence to these principles and ask for the friendly cooperation of the police force and the citizens in carrying out this pledge.

Mr. McLaughlin said he was not yet ready to name his Deputy Commissioners, but that he expected to make the announcements in a few days. He also said he had not yet taken up the matter of the Special Service Division, organized about two years ago by his predecessor, Richard E. Enright, to cope with vice, gambling and Vol-

Mrs. Walker's Auto in Crash; Man Is Killed; Mayor's Wife Not in Car; Chauffeur Freed

When the automobile owned by Mrs. Janet A. Walker, wife of the Mayor, was on the way yesterday forenoon to the Hotel Commodore to take the Mayor and Mrs. Walker to the inauguration ceremonies at the City Hall, it collided with a taxicab at Seventh Avenue and 137th Street. Joseph Kramer, 29 years old, of 1,283 Morris Avenue, the Bronx, who was standing on the running board of the taxicab with Patrolman Ernest Hoffstaetter of the West 123d Street station, was thrown on his head. He died an hour later in Harlem Hospital. The policeman received cuts and bruises on the face, head and body and was attended at the hospital.

Kramer, who was a salesman for the Reid Ice Cream Company, had a short time before taken to the hospital a helper employed by the ice cream company, known only to Kramer as "Smithy." The patient had fallen from one of the company's motor trucks at 9 A. M. in a collision with another vehicle at Seventh Avenue and 125th Street. On arrival at the hospital Kramer was told that the man, who was unconscious, was in a serious condition.

Patrolman Hoffstaetter appeared a few minutes later, and Kramer consented to take him back to the motor truck in the taxicab to obtain the license number. Harry Singer, chauffeur of the taxicab, of 436 East 138th Street, the Bronx, was driving west into Seventh Avenue from West 137th Street when Mrs. Walker's car, driven by her chauffeur, Ernest Ellifser, of 170 Nagle Avenue, came down the avenue. The automobile and the taxicab collided. Singer and the chauffeur of the Walker car placed both Kramer and the policeman in the taxicab and took them to the hospital.

Ellifser followed in Mrs. Walker's car, and when he was informed that Kramer was in a critical condition, he telephoned Mrs. Walker at the Commodore and told her of the accident. He was told to stay at the hospital in the hope that he might be able to render some aid. A few minutes after Ellifser hung up, Kramer died.

Ellifser then accompanied Patrolman Hart to the West 135th Street station, and reported the accident. Lieutenant Hickey decided there were not sufficient grounds on which to arrest Ellifser, and ordered him to appear in the Homicide Court this morning.

The accident was seen by many persons, but the police withheld all information. It was not until a late hour last evening that the details could be obtained. It was explained that the official status of the Walker automobile had not been established up to that time. It further was explained that there is a rule in the Police Department, established in the days of General Theodore Bingham as Police Commissioner in the McClellan Administration not to make public information of accidents in which city owned or controlled vehicles were involved.

It was said that Mayor Walker had not been apprised of the accident until he was about to leave the City Hall in the late afternoon, after his induction into office.

City Posts for Bronx Leaders Who Fought Hylan for Walker

The leaders of the Bronx Democratic organization, which stood by Tammany in support of Mayor Walker and against the renomination of Mayor Hylan at a time when this support counted, appeared to have done very well for themselves last night.

In addition to the appointment of Edward J. Flynn, County Chairman, as City Chamberlain, at $12,000, and the reappointment of Earl H. Miller, leader of the Second Assembly District, as Tax Commissioner, at $9,000, arrangements for further appointments for the leaders had been made, according to information at Bronx Democratic headquarters.

Under Sheriff Thomas H. O'Neill, leader of the Sixth District, will be appointed Commissioner of Jurors, at $8,000, on Jan. 7. Mr. O'Neill will be succeeded by George T. Brown, leader of the Third District. Charles F. Griffin, leader of the Seventh District, is slated for Deputy Street Cleaning Commissioner, at $5,500, and his place as Deputy License Commissioner will be filled by John J. Daly, Fifth District leader, at $4,500. James W. Brown, leader of the First District, will become Public Administrator, at $4,500 and fees, succeeding Ernest E. L. Hammer, elected Justice of the Supreme Court. Thomas J. Nolen, leader of the Fourth District, has been reappointed secretary to Borough President Bruckner, at $5,500.

F. H. WARDER PICKED AS STATE BANK HEAD

SELECTIONS FOR THE BENCH

J. M. Barrett Is New Bronx County Judge—Supreme Court Justices Chosen.

Frank H. Warder of New York City was appointed last night as State Superintendent of Banks to succeed George V. McLaughlin, who resigned this office to become Police Commissioner. Announcement of the appointment was made at Albany by Governor Smith. Mr. Warder has been the Fourth Deputy Superintendent of the State Banking Department in charge of its New York office for the last two years. His home is at 600 West 136th Street.

The Governor also appointed Magistrate James M. Barrett County Judge of Bronx County. The appointment is provided for in the new judiciary article of the State Constitution, which calls for the appointment of another County Judge in Bronx County. Judge Barrett lives at 405 East 139th Street. He is a member of the Monroe Democratic Club of the Second Bronx Assembly District and is 38 years old. His appointment to the County Court will give Mayor Walker the appointment of another Magistrate.

Smith's Other Appointments.

The Governor also made the following appointments:

FRANK N. ADEL, County Judge of Queens, to succeed Burt J. Humphrey, resigned, because of election as Supreme Court Justice.

Magistrate MAX S. LEVINE, Judge of the Court of General Sessions, to succeed Alfred J. Talley, resigned.

JOSEPH T. RYAN, Justice of the City Court, to succeed Louis A. Valente, resigned, because of election as a Supreme Court Justice.

EDWARD R. KOGH, Justice of the City Court, to succeed Joseph V. McKee, resigned, because of election as President of the Board of Aldermen.

Governor Smith also announced the following designations of Supreme Court Justices to the Appellate Divisions of the Second and Fourth Departments:

Second Department—Justice EDWARD LAZANSKY of Brooklyn to succeed Charles H. Kelby for a term of five years; Justice J. ADDISON YOUNG of Westchester County for a term ending with the expiration of his term as Justice on Dec. 31, 1929, and Justice ISAAC M. KAPPER of Brooklyn for five years.

MAYOR SWEARS IN HIS AIDS

PLEDGES COURTESY TO ALL

TAMMANY HAS A GREAT DAY

Braves Out in Force, Headed by Voorhis—Walker Makes Seven More Appointments.

Tammany went into complete control of the City Government yesterday by the inauguration of James J. Walker as Mayor in City Hall.

There was a great outpouring of the braves from the Fourteenth Street wigwam to witness the formal induction into office of Mr. Walker, the seventh elected Mayor of the greater city and the first simon-pure Tammany organization Mayor since Robert C. Van Wyck, for George B. McClellan, the only other member of Tammany to be elected since then, broke with the organization soon after his second election.

Many women also were present at the inaugural ceremonies. Because of the lack of any large room in City Hall, the crowd was split up into several sections. Six or seven hundred, or as many as could crowd in, attended the formal ceremony in the Board of Estimate room. Hundreds of others crowded the corridors and stairs and the Mayor's reception room. Mayor Walker's colleagues in the State Senate, including Senator Courtlandt Nicoll, the only Republican member of the upper house of the State Legislature from New York City, met the new Mayor in the Governor's room, and several hundred even sat in the Aldermanic Chamber under the false impression that Mayor Walker was to speak there.

Smith and Olvany Absent.

The inaugural was exclusively Mayor Walker's occasion. Neither Governor Alfred E. Smith nor George W. Olvany, leader of Tammany, the other two leading members of the Fourteenth Street organization, was present, but most of the other Tammany notables, headed by John R. Voorhis, the venerable President of the Board of Elections and Grand Sachem of the Tammany Society, and including practically all the Assembly district leaders, were there.

Another notable absentee was William T. Collins, Mayor for a day through the retirement of John F. Hylan from that office to take a $4,200 pension. Mr. Collins was busy elsewhere taking over the duties of his new office of County Clerk, and to Mr. Hylan fell the duty of welcoming the new Mayor and saying a few words on his own account.

The retiring Mayor, in complimenting Mayor Walker on the presence of a large number of friends, commented somewhat sarcastically upon the number of those present at his own inaugurals on Jan. 1, 1918 and 1922, and declared that there never had been and never would be a Mayor who had tried harder to serve the people than he had.

Mr. Hylan, who was applauded when he rose to speak, left the room after Senator Walker's speech, accompanied by Mrs. Hylan and Mr. and Mrs. John F. Sinnott, his son-in-law and daughter. He passed through the crowds in the corridors, doffing his hat in response to the ripple of applause that accompanied his progress, went down the steps, entered a new Cadillac automobile with the other members of his family and after eight years passed out of the official picture.

Walker Asks Citizens' Help.

Mayor Walker in his inaugural speech accepted full responsibility for the administration of the City Government during the next four years, but added that he appreciated that the Mayor could not run the government alone without the cooperation of his fellow-officials. He repeated his desire and intention to accord courteous and respectful treatment to the public and declared that every other employe of the city, no matter what his rank, must do the same.

Discussing the policies of his administration in a broad way, Mayor Walker emphasized the necessity for the distribution of the city's population, for which he had previously announced his intention of having a survey, pledged a liberal educational policy, asserted that there would be no further attempt to play politics with transit, declared that the city should have the power to regulate transit operation and emphasized the need of a constitutional amendment to extend the city's credit to provide money to build the new subways so greatly needed.

Mayor Walker emphasized the necessity of traffic relief and the acquisition of land for new parks and playgrounds. He pledged extension of child welfare work and repeated his pledge to make New York a "clean" city and to maintain an adequate and competent police force. In discussing the possibility of new projects, Mayor Walker declared that the extent to which these could be inaugurated would depend entirely upon the financial resources of the city in the face of a constantly increasing cost of government.

Discussing the recently acquired "home rule" power of the Municipal Assembly, Mayor Walker said it was his intention to name a commission to develop a plan for reconstructing the form of the city government.

More specific recommendations from the new Mayor on some of the policies of his Administration are expected in a message which he will send to the Board of Aldermen as the lower house of the Municipal Assembly. He is expected to read this message at the organization meeting of the new board on Monday.

Crowd Arrives Early.

Invitations for a reception to precede the inaugural ceremony had been issued for 10:30 in the morning, and by that hour the corridors of City Hall were filled with men and women formed in a line reaching from the east end of the building to the Mayor's reception room in the southwest corner.

Mr. Hylan arrived at City Hall at 11:20, and fifteen minutes later an escort of mounted policemen clattered into the City Hall Plaza, followed by automobiles bearing Mayor Walker and his party.

Mayor Walker was accompanied by Mrs. Walker and her mother, Mrs. Nan Walker Burke of Monroe, Orange County. Other relatives in his party included his two brothers, William H. and George F. Walker, and their wives; his uncle, P. J. Roon of 92 Morningside Avenue, and his three aunts, the Misses Mary, Anne and Catharine Roon, of 74 Perry Street.

Others in the Mayor's immediate party were Edward L. Stanton, Secretary to the Mayor; Charles F. Kerrigan, Assistant to the Mayor; Joseph Johnson, Commissioner of Public Works, Manhattan, who had charge of the inauguration arrangements; Supreme Court Justice Robert F. Wagner, James P. Sinnott, Commissioner of Accounts Joseph A. Warren, George Collins, Executive Secretary to the Mayor; Patrick Hogan and Louis F. Snedigar, Mayor of Miami Beach, Fla.

A cheer went up from the crowd on the steps of City Hall as Mayor Walker stepped from his automobile and assisted Mrs. Walker and his sister to alight.

"Atta boy, Jimmie!" shouted a man as the Mayor began to ascend the steps. Another cheer followed, and the crowd surged forward to shake the Mayor's hand.

"Let me in; I want to go to work," Mayor Walker said with a smile to those who attempted to block his progress.

With the assistance of the police a lane was quickly cleared and Mayor and Mrs. Walker entered City Hall, going directly to the Governor's room on the second floor, where the Mayor's former colleagues in the State Senate were waiting to receive him.

Mayor Walker, who wore a silk hat and a dark blue overcoat cut in at the waist, doffed these on entering the Governor's room. He wore a black cutaway and black silk tie, fastened with a single pearl pin. Mrs. Walker wore a seal coat and black velvet hat. She was gowned in maroon silk and wore a purple orchid.

Chats With Old Friends.

The presence of his colleagues in the State Senate, of which he was the Democratic leader for six years, pleased Mayor Walker. He also was gratified at the presence of many old friends. He chatted with them informally after shaking hands, so that he was delayed somewhat in reaching the Board of Estimate room, where several hundred persons had already assembled to witness the formal administration of the oath.

Just before the entrance of the Mayor, a delegation from the Grand Street Boys, of which organization Mayor Walker is Vice President, carried in a huge floral piece ten feet high and placed it back of the Mayor's chair in the circle of seats occupied by the Board of Estimate members. This floral decoration had a painted centre of three small boys and bore the inscription "Good fellowship, benevolence, charity."

Joseph V. McKee, President of the Board of Aldermen, entered the chamber soon afterward, followed closely by Controller Charles W. Berry and Mrs. Berry. Both were cheered. Almost immediately afterward Mrs. Hylan, Mr. and Mrs. Sinnott, Irving J. O'Hara, retired detective and Mrs. Hylan's brother, and Miss Frances A. Rokus, executive secretary to Mayor Hylan, entered the room and were ushered to chairs placed in front of the first row of seats.

The crowd in the room was so great that the police under the general direction of Chief Inspector William J. Lahey had great difficulty in clearing a passage for the entrance of Mayor Walker and also in shifting a sufficient number of those standing on the dais to give the Mayor and those taking part in the ceremony room to sit or stand there.

A ripple of applause outside signalized the approach of Mayor Walker. He was preceded by State Senator Bernard Downing, who is to succeed the Mayor as minority leader of the Senate and who acted as master of ceremonies, and by Mr. Hylan. Mayor Walker was followed by Mrs. Walker, Colonel John J. Phelan of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, who with his staff acted as an escort for the new Mayor; Mr. Johnson, Justice Wagner, Mr. Stanton and Mr. Kerrigan.

The Oath Administered.

The crowding on the dais was so great that Mayor Walker, Mr. Hylan and Mrs. Walker had difficulty in reaching their seats. Mr. McKee offered his chair to Mrs. Walker and Controller Berry also rose as the Mayor entered. The other members of the Board of Estimate, Julius Miller, Borough President of Manhattan; Joseph A. Guider, Borough President of Brooklyn; Maurice E. Connolly, Borough President of Queens and John A. Lynch, Borough President of Richmond, stood around the half circle of seats.

Senator Downing, who presided, had difficulty in getting order, as those in the front of the room remained standing, shutting off the view of those in the rear. Shouts of "sit down" came from the rear of the room, and repeated pounding of the gavel by Senator Downing failed at first to bring quiet.

"The oath of office to Mayor Walker will be administered by Justice of the Supreme Court Robert F. Wagner," Senator Downing said as soon as he could make himself heard.

Justice Wagner then administered in public the same oath he administered to Mr. Walker last Tuesday, while a group of newspaper photographers in front of the semi-circular Board of Estimate desk took a series of flashlight pictures.

Mr. Hylan shook hands with Mayor Walker at the conclusion of the oath. The new Mayor then looked straight out into the eyes of the spectators. He at first smiled as he recognized friends. Then his face assumed a more serious expression and his eyes filled momentarily with tears as he glanced about the room and heard the applause that signalized his formal induction into the Mayoralty.

Senator Downing then said:

"I now have the honor of presenting the Hon. John F. Hylan and ask him to say a few words."

Hylan Speaks Briefly.

Marked applause greeted Mr. Hylan when he rose to speak. The retiring Mayor appeared at ease, and if he felt any resentment at being called upon to assist at the inauguration of the man who defeated him for renomination in the Democratic primaries, he did not show it.

Speaking slowly and distinctly, Mr. Hylan said:

"I recalled this morning the three happiest days of my life.

"The first was the day on which I led the prettiest little country lassie in a hamlet up-State to the altar and we were married.

"The second was Jan. 1, 1918, when I was inducted into the office of Mayor of the greatest city.

"The third was the day on which the great responsibility that a Mayor must assume was ended, and that is practically today.

"I want to take this opportunity to thank the people of the city for their support and for the confidence they have shown in me during the eight long years I have been in office.

"I want to compliment the Mayor of this city for continuing in office some of the commissioners who served during my term as Mayor. They are capable and experienced men, and, I am sure, will render valuable service to the city and the new Administration.

"I want to congratulate you, Mr. Mayor, on having so many friends present. As I look about me, I remember some of their faces on Jan. 1, 1918, and again on Jan. 1, 1922.

"Other times may come. Other Mayors have been elected to this high and important office and other Mayors will be elected to this great office, but never will any Mayor endeavor to serve the people more than I have tried to serve the people during the eight long years that I have been Mayor.

"I have been 100 per cent. loyal to the people of this city. I have been 100 per cent. loyal to my party. I have been 100 per cent. loyal to my friends.

"I take this opportunity to welcome you, Mr. Mayor, to wish you a happy new year and to wish you every possible success."

Walker Replies.

Mayor Walker spoke immediately after Mayor Hylan without introduction by Senator Downing. The Mayor had followed his predecessor's speech with serious attention and departed from his prepared address to reply to it.

"My dear friends," Senator Walker said after the applause that greeted him had died down, "of course, you will realize that this is not altogether an ordinary day for me. It would not be trespassing on the truth if I told you that this is my first experience of this kind of an occasion. I, too, Judge Hylan, am very happy today.

"I am happy in the presence of so many old and dear friends. My happiness is augmented by the fact that today I was permitted to shake the hands of schoolmates and pals of earliest recollection. Thank God, they're still my pals, and I was happy in the reciprocity of sentiment I felt today.

"My happiness grows when I recall the presence of my colleagues of the State Senate. As we gathered in a room outside, there was no middle aisle, no majority and no minority, but all together."

Mayor Walker added that he was happy that Justice Wagner, his first party leader in the Senate, had administered the oath, that his second leader and immediate predecessor, Surrogate James A. Foley, was present, and that one of his party leaders in the Assembly, Supreme Court Justice Aaron J. Levy, also was present.

"I had another leader," Mayor Walker continued, referring to a leader in the Assembly, "a leader who is now presiding as no other ever has done over the destines of this State, the Governor."

This reference to Governor Smith, whose insistence upon the retirement of Mayor Hylan did much to bring about Senator Walker's designation by Tammany, whose assistance was an important factor in bringing about the nomination of Senator Walker and the defeat of Mayor Hylan in the primaries, and whose support contributed largely to Mayor Walker's election, brought prolonged applause.

Mayor Walker then explained that he had prepared an address in advance in order that there might be no conflict between what he wished to say concerning the policies of his administration and the personal feelings induced by his induction into office and the presence of a great number of his friends. The Mayor then read his prepared speech, which appears in another column.

Woman Leader Faints.

As Mayor Walker was nearing the end of this speech, there was a stir in the group almost immediately behind him and a woman fell to the floor in a faint.

She was Mrs. Agnes Leonard Ward, Democratic woman leader of the Seventh Brooklyn Assembly District and Secretary to Borough President Guider. Senator Walker stopped reading while Mrs. Ward was revived and shortly afterward she left the room.

Apparently fearing that the press of those crowded in the room was so great that others might be overcome, Mayor Walker closed his speech without reading the last four or five paragraphs.

"That is substantially my message of today," he said. "For myself, I simply pledge you an energetic and earnest administration with a background of sincerity which I am confident will lead to the kind of administration which the people of this city want and to which they are entitled. With a heart full of gratitude to both you and the city, I thank you most sincerely."

Mayor Walker then personally administered the constitutional oath to Mr. Stanton and Mr. Kerrigan, who are to be his two principal assistants.

"Dear friends," he said, "no more pleasant duty ever devolved on me than to administer the oath as secretary to the Mayor to my loyal assistant of the last six years, to the man who before that was the loyal assistant of Judge Foley, and before that the same kind of an assistant to Judge Wagner, Edward L. Stanton."

Mayor Walker then administered the oath to Mr. Kerrigan, who, he said, had made a great reputation for efficiency in public service as Deputy Controller.

These were the only oaths administered by the Mayor to incoming officials at the public ceremony. Mayor Walker took that occasion to emphasize the close and intimate relations between himself and his secretary and assistant. Oaths to other incoming officials were administered in the Mayor's office, and announcement to that effect was made by the Mayor at the public ceremony.

Inauguration Closes.

"I understand that some other serious swearing is going to be done, but that will be done in the Mayor's office," he said. "Will those gentlemen who so generously and patriotically consented to become a part of this administration—"

Laughter interrupted Mayor Walker at this point, and he failed to complete the foregoing sentence.

"I don't think I need to call the roll," he added, referring to his appointees. "They know who they are. Thank you again for your attendance here today."

This final expression of thanks by Mayor Walker ended the formal inauguration. Greeting many of those present by name, Mayor Walker went down the stairs to the Mayor's office and swore into the city's service some thirty or forty of his appointees, it being judged unnecessary to administer new oaths to those, like the members of the Municipal Civil Service Commission, appointed for definite terms not yet completed.

Mayor and Mrs. Walker then went into the Mayor's reception room, where they remained for more than an hour shaking hands with hundreds of persons, many of whom had waited in the lower corridors of City Hall all through the inaugural ceremonies.

Mayor and Mrs. Walker left the City Hall at 3:15. The Mayor said that he and Mrs. Walker and other members of the family would have a New Year's dinner at the Hotel Commodore, where they have been staying while their home at 6 St. Luke's Place has been undergoing repairs.

While most of the Democratic organization leaders of prominence attended the inaugural ceremonies, there was noticeable a decided sprinkling of Republicans in the line that formed to shake Mayor Walker's hand and wish him success in his administration.

Among these was W. Ward Smith, former secretary to Governor Miller; William Leary, secretary of the Port of New York Authority; Luther B. Little, former secretary of the Republican State Committee, and James Blaine Walker, secretary of the Transit Commission.

Flowers Greet Mrs. Pratt.

Mrs. John T. Pratt, member of the Board of Aldermen from the Fifteenth District, was another of those who went to City Hall. Mrs. Pratt, who was sworn in several days ago, found her desk in the Aldermanic chamber covered with flowers. She was accompanied by Frank J. Coleman Jr., Republican leader of the Fifteenth, and Assemblyman Samuel H. Hofstadter, also from that district.

Practically every Tammany Assembly district leader was present, and, of course, all the new city appointees, who took their oaths before Mayor Walker. Others noticed in the crowd were Supreme Court Justice Norman S. Dike of Brooklyn, a Republican; Colonel Jacob Ruppert, Dr. Thomas J. Darlington, former Health Commissioner; John H. Delaney and Daniel L. Ryan of the Board of Transportation, Supreme Court Justice John V. McAvoy, James A. Farley, Chairman of the State Boxing Commission; Captain and Mrs. N. Taylor Phillips and former Controller Charles L. Craig. Stewart Browne, President of the United Real Estate Owners' Association, long known as a questioner of Mayor Hylan, occupied his accustomed place, standing just to one side of the desk of the Board of Estimate.

All the Democratic county leaders were present except Judge Olvany, Tammany being represented by James F. Egan, its Secretary, and the district leaders. John H. McCooey, Brooklyn Democratic leader, stood on the dais, smiling broadly as if completely satisfied with the recognition accorded him in the way of patronage. City Chamberlain Edward J. Flynn, Democratic leader of the Bronx, was busy vibrating between the inaugural ceremonies, the reception of Joseph V. McKee, President of the Board of Aldermen, in the other end of City Hall and congratulating Bronxites whose appointments had been brought about. Borough President Connolly, the Democratic leader of Queens, was present in his official capacity. David S. Rendt, Richmond Democratic County Chairman, stood near Mr. McCooey during the ceremonies.

Among the Walker primary supporters present were Benjamin F. Schreiber, his campaign manager; Frank X. Sullivan, the Walker primary campaign manager in Queens, and John J. Curtin, the Brooklyn Walker primary leader.

Woman Leaders Present.

Women present included Mrs. John Blair, President of the Women's Democratic Union; Mrs. John F. Gilchrist, wife of the State Tax Commissioner; Mrs. Mary A. Glynn, sister of Governor Smith; Mrs. Anna Moskowitz Kross, and Miss Grace Ludlow Kelly, head of the Democratic Junior League, which took an active part in the campaign to elect Mayor Walker.

The sides of the Mayor's reception room were literally banked with flowers sent by friends. Among the donors of some of the more elaborate floral pieces were former Sheriff David H. Knott, Chairman of the New York County Democratic Committee; Mr. McCooey, the Department of Finance and the election district captains of the First Assembly District, which Mr. Walker first represented in the Assembly and later, as part of the larger district, in the Senate.

While Mayor Walker was holding his reception in the west end of City Hall, Mr. McKee, the Aldermanic President, was having his reception in the other. Judge and Mrs. McKee received hundreds of callers, including most of the members of the new Board of Aldermen and many residents of the Bronx, who were headed by City Chamberlain Flynn. Later the new Aldermen met in the Aldermanic Chamber, where they were informed of the assignment of seats for the next two years. The board will meet at noon on Monday, when it is expected to organize formally and elect the leaders chosen at the party caucuses last week.

Text of Walker's Inauguration Address

On assuming the great office of Mayor of the greatest city in the world my natural feeling is one of deep responsibility. I accept and will assume the full measure of responsibility, although I fully appreciate that the Mayor alone cannot run the whole City Government and that he must have the cooperation of his fellow-servants of the people.

And I will go further and say that the officials who administer the various branches of Government cannot accomplish all that this city is entitled to have accomplished unless all societies, civic agencies and organized communities participate and cooperate in the effort to make the city better. This Administration will endeavor to make the city better in every respect.

I hope that the people of this city will not look upon their public servants as antagonistic, but rather will look upon them as their servants and their friends. The Mayor proposes to be courteous and respectful to everybody he meets, and he feels that if he is to do so, then as the Chief Magistrate he has the right to ask, and he will see to it, that every employe of the city, no matter what his rank may be, will act in the same manner toward the public.

The problems that confront us are many and complex. They affect a great variety of interests and nationalities and the customs and habits of six million people living in the greatest community in the world.

Health.

We must guard the health of the people. They must be protected at all times against the invasion of disease. Officials alone, however, cannot accomplish the best results unless they have the aid and assistance of the various medical and welfare societies and those citizens who are acquainted with living conditions in the various parts of the city.

It is a constant problem to prevent the development of such congestion of the population as breeds disease, vice and crime. Therefore we must study carefully means for the distribution of population so that decent, sanitary and real homes may be established.

Commerce.

This city is great because of its commerce, both domestic and foreign, and the business interests which are so important to the life and prosperity of the city must be protected and encouraged by the creation of suitable facilities. Here again the officials must call upon all business organizations having to do with domestic and foreign commerce for information and advice as to what measures are necessary to aid business and what facilities should be provided.

Industries.

This is the largest industrial and manufacturing community in the world. There are more manufacturers and more employes of manufacturers in this city than in any other community, and the organized manufacturers and the organized labor unions must promote and maintain peace in industry for the city to be prosperous. The aid and sympathy of this Administration will be extended to both in order that we may have that kind of prosperity.

Education.

It is an expected and commonplace thing to say that education shall be free and sufficient for all of the people. We have in this city a school population in excess of 1,200,000, of which a round million are being cared for in the public schools under the jurisdiction of our Department of Education, whose members are appointed by the Mayor.

The expenditures of this department for maintenance alone are now in excess of $100,000,000 a year.

Education is a constitutional obligation of the State, which has been delegated to the local authorities. It is a trust, and upon our faithful execution of this trust may depend the future of home rule for cities. We pledge the fulfillment of this obligation to the very last word. We must be careful that no cliques, factions or parties will control our educational system, and that we have nothing but the very best of educational ability in charge of the training of the children of the people of this city.

We ask the cooperation of the parents' associations, of the organized parents' associations, of the organized community organizations to make the schools better and more efficient.

I believe that New York City is entitled to a larger monetary contribution from the State for education. But whether the State does or does not do its share, the city in its determination to give every boy and girl a proper free public school education will not diminish its contributions in the next Administration.

Transit.

The transit question has been a subject of much controversy and conflict between the city and State authorities. It is time that this controversy was ended and that the city had full and complete power to develop its own facilities to take care of its own transportation needs. This is entirely a local question which must be solved by the expenditure of local funds and which does not affect any other community in the State. Since it is the city's money that is being spent and the city's needs that are being satisfied, the right of control, as well as of construction, should be vested in city authorities.

The demand for additional transit facilities. This Administration will not permit of unnecessary conflict or controversy. Let the credit go where it will, but let us have better transit facilities. This administration will not seek to glorify itself at the expense of delay in this most essential necessity. More transit facilities must be provided without any kind of political or personal interference.

The city is entitled to the cooperation of the State Legislature in its efforts to provide the additional transit facilities that are required. It is generally understood that the revenues from taxation are not sufficient to pay for the construction of the transit lines that are necessary, and that recourse must be had to the credit of the city.

The borrowing capacity of the city under the present constitutional limit is not enough to construct these new transit lines as rapidly as the needs of the population demand. We shall ask the Legislature to permit the people to vote upon an amendment to the Constitution to extend the city's borrowing capacity. At the time the present Constitution was written it was never contemplated that the use of public funds would be necessary to provide transportation facilities or that the cost of transportation would reach the enormous amount that it has in later years by reason of requirements for subsurface construction. We are asking now to have the Constitution brought up to modern conditions.

Distribution of Population.

The population of this city is increasing at the rate of more than 100,000 persons a year. Unless this growth is to be strangled, this annual increase in population must be provided with homes. The central sections of the city are already overpopulated. The centre of manufacturing and of business is in Manhattan and in the old settlements. It means health, morality and decency to provide for the location of homes outside of the congested areas of population. Therefore, more and more transportation facilities must be provided every year, and the concentrated energy of the next Administration will be devoted to the building of more rapid transit facilities as one of the most important things to be done.

Traffic.

Closely connected with the subject of transit is the regulation of traffic on our crowded highways. Much has been accomplished in the past toward controlling the well nigh intolerable conditions which exist in some of our thoroughfares. It is a subject which demands and will receive most careful and scientific study in an effort to ameliorate conditions in so far as it is humanly possible.

One of the most pressing traffic requirements is for an increase of highway facilities between the boroughs. The solution of this difficulty is already being studied, and additional tunnels or bridges, as expert advice may determine, should be provided without delay.

Parks and Playgrounds.

Parks, playgrounds and recreational facilities are essential to the happiness and welfare of the people, and they must be obtained now while the sites are within the power of the city to purchase.

Child Welfare.

The happiness and welfare of the children appeal particularly to my heart. I think one of the greatest things that this city does is to keep 30,000 little children out of public institutions and in the care of their natural guardians. To the extension of this noble work, and to the development of all activities looking to the welfare of children, I pledge my utmost endeavor.

Fire Protection.

The safety of property requires the maintenance of an adequate and efficient fire department, equipped with every device that will not only save property, but also safeguard the lives of the brave men upon whom we depend to fight the fires that occur.

Police.

But more important than the protection of property is the protection of the lives and the morality of the people on the streets and in their homes. For this we need and must have not only an adequate and contented force of trained policemen, but more than that we must have the cooperation and the help of every organization in this community that believing in sound morality and civic cleanliness.

The policemen must be respected and must be respectful.

It is customary to blame and denounce the police whenever there appears to be an unusual amount of crime or laxity of public morals. I maintain that the people who reside in a neighborhood are at least in part responsible for the cleanliness of that neighborhood. There are in this city organizations devoted to religion, to fraternity, and to community welfare who, within their organizations, have knowledge of every phase of life in this city. Every one of the multitude of nationalities has its own individual and separate welfare organizations. The vast majority of the members of these organizations are individually decent, law abiding and moral. Ninety-nine per cent. of the population of this city is decent, respectable, industrious and home loving, and the fair name of this city should never be besmirched by the vicious, evil and insignificant minority that attempts to do it.

If we ascertain that additional policemen are necessary, I am satisfied that the people of this community will cheerfully bear the cost in order to secure the protection that they are entitled to for life and property.

Cost of Government.

The cost of Government continually grows, and we must be reconciled to the fact that it will continue to grow. While the city continues to expand and prosper the Government must fulfill its obligations, and at the same time the taxpayer must receive 100 cents in value for every dollar the city pays out.

All of the objects of governmental activity that I have mentioned are established agencies in this city and all are and will be developed and supported.

There are many other things which have been suggested and which are very desirable, to which we will also give attention. The extent to which new projects can be inaugurated will depend entirely upon the financial resources of the city.

The city is universally regarded as the richest and most generous in the world, but there are points beyond which it cannot bear certain financial burdens. Every section of the community thinks that some improvement is desirable, but the test must be: Is the improvement essential in comparison with some other things that are also needed? All too frequently some sections that have been more vociferous than others have received improvements to the exclusion of others more deserving.

I have invited and I expect that every community organization in this city will take an interest and present the needs of the separate localities, but it will be the duty of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and this Administration constantly to remember that the people must pay the bills and to discriminate between what is merely desirable and what is absolutely essential for the welfare of the community at large.

Home Rule and Simplification of City Government.

The city has been granted the power of local legislation and some measure of home rule by the recent constitutional amendment. It has for the first time the power to revise its own charter and to readjust its own governmental organization.

It is my intention, as soon as conditions will permit, to ask men and women best qualified by experience and training to give their unselfish service to the development of a city plan based upon a scientific survey of the city, looking forward to a simplification of government machinery and the elimination of duplicate effort—a comprehensive city plan to which this city may grow in the future.

Legislation must be drafted for submission to the local legislature, and I will deal with this subject more extensively in a very short time, and from time to time as occasion warrants.

These things I am at liberty to pledge in so far as the financial resources of the city will permit us to go.

There are organizations representing every nationality, every line of occupation and industry, every religion, every profession, and every phase of community life, if they will devote just a slight attention to the welfare of their city, who can be of immeasurable benefit and assistance to this Administration. This Administration represents all of them, and intends to represent all of them, and it expects, requests and demands their assistance and cooperation.

WALKER PAYS HONOR TO FRIEND'S MEMORY

Mayor Walker's first act after his inaugural had nothing to do with politics. It was to pay his respects to the memory of a friend of long standing, the mother of Lieut. Col. William J. Costigan of the 165th Regiment, who served on his official staff during the ceremony.

Mrs. Mary G. Costigan of 271 Ninety-second Street, Brooklyn, died late Wednesday night, and Mayor Walker, when informed yesterday morning of her death, immediately told Lieut. Col. Costigan that he would attend her funeral Saturday morning at St. Michael's Church in West Thirty-fourth Street.

"You will have too many things to do tomorrow, Jim," said Colonel Costigan, who has known the Mayor since he was in his teens.

"Then I am going over this afternoon just as soon as the ceremonies are over," replied the Mayor.

So, as soon as the Mayor was free, he and Mrs. Walker, Colonel John J. Phelan, Major Jerome B. Crowley, Major Martin H. Meaney, Captain Richard Allen, Captain Joseph Flannery and the Rev. Francis P. Duffy, Chaplain, drove to the funeral parlors at 406 West Thirty-fourth Street, where Mrs. Costigan's body rests. An escort of motorcycle police accompanied them.

Mayor Walker had known the deceased many years. When he was a boy, living in St. Luke's Place, Julia Riley, about his age, lived in Nineteenth Street, near by. They grew up together, and when William J. Costigan courted the childhood friend of Mr. Walker an acquaintance which later developed into close friendship sprang up between the two men. Miss Riley is now Mrs. Costigan, and Mr. and Mrs. Walker have maintained their friendship with Mr. and Mrs. Costigan and with Mr. Costigan's mother.

when Mr. Levine withdrew as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Borough President against Julius Miller, the incumbent. Mr. Levine had powerful support for the post but was considered unavailable because he, like Mayor Walker, whose designation had been made, came from below Fourteenth Street and it was thought impolitic to name two candidates for the Board of Estimate from that section.

Judge Levine, who returned from Albany last night, told how "Manny" Wolf, hearing of his mission to Albany, rushed to the train in evening clothes and boarded it without opportunity to make a change. With them went Representative Christopher D. Sullivan and Hylan Bushel, Judge Levine's former law partner.

Judge Levine said that when the quartet was ushered into the presence of Governor Smith at noon Mr. Wolf kept his overcoat buttoned up to the throat, although the Governor's room was warm.

"Why don't you take off your coat, Manny?" asked the Governor.

"Well, it's like this," Judge Levine said Mr. Wolf replied. "I have on full dress. I was unable to change to street clothes and catch the train. I had to see my old friend, Judge Levine, get the appointment. I didn't stop to think about the conventions."

Governor Smith, as he handed Judge Levine the paper on which his appointment was written, winked at Congressman Sullivan and remarked:

"Max, it is tied with green ribbon."

Justice Koch, appointed to the City Court bench, resides in the Williamsbridge section of the Bronx. He was the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Representative in the Twenty-fourth Congressional District in the special election held to elect a successor to the late Representative James V. Ganly in 1923. Mr. Ryan, the other new City Court Justice, was an anti-organization candidate for the Democratic nomination for the City Court against Justice Lorenz Zeller in 1915.

DR. HARRIS OUTLINES CITY HEALTH POLICY

To Follow Mayor Walker's Admonition to Disregard Politics in Department.

ASKS FOR COOPERATION

Commissioner Wants Newspapers, Public Health and Medical Groups to Aid Him.

Dr. Louis I. Harris, the new Health Commissioner, outlined yesterday the policies he said would guide him in the administration of the department. He said that in endeavoring to maintain a standard of high efficiency Mayor Walker had told him that politics was to be disregarded. Commissioner Harris announced that he would seek the cooperation of the newspapers and of the public health organizations. An announcement would be made next week, he said, of the elimination of "unnecessary divisions" in the Department of Health, the continuation of which might justify "unpleasant interpretations."

"Mayor Walker has emphasized an ideal of courtesy and service to every member of the community," Dr. Harris said. "It will naturally be my aim and anxiety to model my conduct in conformity with this very obvious and necessary principle of conduct. The spirit of this idea and ideal will be inculcated and insisted upon in the Health Department.

"Mayor Walker has stressed the necessity of establishing forthwith clean and efficient methods in the conduct of the department, so that every one in the community who is particularly concerned with its proper administration shall be inspired with confidence in its integrity. The Mayor has emphatically affirmed this to be his sole desire in the conduct of the department. To the fulfillment of this demand by the Mayor I shall dedicate myself whole-heartedly.

To Tighten Slack Places.

"There will be an announcement early next week of certain changes, the object of which will be to tighten up slack places and to eliminate unnecessary divisions created during the last several years which duplicate services the continued existence of which might well justify unpleasant interpretations. The changes contemplated will be with a view to strengthening the bureau organization and reinstating the methods and forms that made the department a model and pattern for the rest of this country.

"There will be four main purposes in the administration of the department which may be stated at the outset. First, to receive the cooperation of the public health committees of the foremost medical societies of the city so that we may join in common action for the prevention of disease and effect as powerful an alliance as possible for this purpose.

"Second, to establish cordial relations with the public press so that such timely and important messages as the Health Department may have to offer on matters of personal or community health shall be presented as promptly and as effectively as possible. This is merely in recognition of the fact that the newspapers, and other organs of public information, are of prime importance in the education of the public.

"Third, to so cooperate with the Department of Education that the powerful influence of public school teachers shall be enlisted in inculcating right habits of living in children during their most plastic period.

Seeks to Unite Health Bodies.

"Fourth, to secure the cooperation, support and joint action of all non-official health and welfare agencies in this city, so that all of us may direct our efforts with as little confusion and division of forces as possible in achieving our common goal—the maintenance of public and personal health and the prevention of disease."

COLLINS MADE CLERK; SEES CULKIN INDUCTED

Mayor-for-Day Is Too Busy to Be at Inaugural—Bronx Friends Honor Goldman.

William T. Collins, Mayor for a day, had a busy time yesterday. He was first publicly installed as County Clerk at formal ceremonies in the County Court House, and then went to the Hall of Records to witness the installation of Charles W. Culkin as Sheriff. Then he hastened to City Hall to greet Mayor Walker after the completion of the Mayoralty inauguration ceremonies.

Mr. Collins was installed in office in the presence of several hundred friends. Thomas M. Farley, First Deputy County Clerk, was master of ceremonies. James A. Donegan, the retiring County Clerk, delivered the keys of the office to Mr. Collins.

Borough President Henry Bruckner of the Bronx, who began his third term in that office, announced the reappointment of William J. Flynn as Commissioner of Public Works.

The Bronxites, who journeyed to Manhattan after their own early installations into office, went from the reception in City Hall to the Municipal Building, where another Bronx resident, Albert Goldman, took office as Commissioner of Plant and Structures. Mr. Goldman's office was filled with flowers, one of the pieces being a reproduction of the ferryboat Bronx that almost filled the room. City Chamberlain Edward J. Flynn, leader of the Bronx Democratic organization, also received many Bronx callers in his office.

She announced the reappointment of Mrs. Flynn as Secretary, and of George E. Best as First Deputy, Michael McCarthy, Second Deputy, and Martin Holzman, Third Deputy.

Miss Mathews said in a short address that she hoped to facilitate the registration of land under the Torrens system, by inducing mortgage and loan companies to recognize Torrens titles in making loans.

HYLAN TO REST FOR MONTH.

Passes Quiet New Year's Day With Family—Policeman Guards Home.

Former Moyar John F. Hylan spent a quiet New Year's Day. He left the City Hall with Mrs. Hylan in the afternoon and went directly to his home, 959 Bushwick Parkway. He remained there only a short time, and then went to Forest Hills, where he took dinner with his daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Sinnott.

"I have several good propositions under consideration," the former Mayor said after his return home. "I have not made up my mind regarding any of them. I'll decide within thirty days, but in the meantime I am going to take it easy and rest up a bit."

Mr. and Mrs. Hylan spent the evening quietly at home. A policeman was on duty yesterday at the special post established near the Hylan home.

BERRY'S ASSISTANT IS JOHN J. SULLIVAN

Lawyer, Once Fordham Athlete, Named for $10,000 Place Vacated by Kerrigan.

BERRY ANNOUNCES CABINET

Four of Craig's Staff, Philbin, Prial, Egan and Hoyt Retained—Numerous Other Appointments.

Controller Charles W. Berry, who assumed formal control of the Department of Finance at 10:30 A. M., yesterday announced the appointment of John J. Sullivan, of 160 Claremont Avenue, Manhattan, as Deputy Controller to succeed Charles F. Kerrigan, who has been appointed Assistant to the Mayor. The salary is $10,000 a year.

Mr. Sullivan for nearly two years has been Chief of the Department of Law and Adjustment in the Controller's office. He is a graduate of Fordham University and Fordham Law School and took a post-graduate course in Columbia University. While in college and as a member of the New York Athletic Club, Mr. Sullivan won many honors as a track athlete.

During the World War, Mr. Sullivan was stationed in Washington, D. C., as counsel to the corporation division of the office of the Alien Property Custodian. Since then, up to the time of his appointment by former Controller Charles L. Craig as head of the Bureau of Law and Adjustment, he practiced law in this city. His appointment was partly due to the fact that the present Controller, unlike Mr. Craig, is not a lawyer. Mr. Sullivan is a member of the Andrew B. Keating Association, the Tammany club of the Thirteenth Assembly District.

Controller Berry announced the reappointment of Arthur J. Philbin of Manhattan and Frank J. Prial of Brooklyn as Deputy Controllers, of James F. Egan, secretary of Tammany, as actuary auditor, and of Philip D. Hoyt of Manhattan as secretary to the Finance Department. Messrs. Philbin, Prial, Sullivan, Egan and Hoyt were sworn in by Supreme Court Justice Jeremiah T. Mahoney, who was present when Controller Berry assumed office.

James J. Burns Jr. of 128 Kent Street, Brooklyn, was appointed stenographer to the Controller at $4,000 a year. Jeremiah J. Sullivan of 4 Perry Street, Manhattan, who has been an assistant in the Indictment Bureau of the District Attorney's office, was appointed confidential inspector at $4,500.

Other appointments were announced by the new Controller as follows:

M'LAUGHLIN GIVES PLEDGE FOR POLICE

stead law violators, and which, it had been reported several days before, was to be abolished.

Mr. McLaughlin remained at Police Headquarters about two hours and a half, and the only official he called on there was Chief Inspector William J. Lahey. The Chief Inspector was at the ceremonies attending the induction of Mayor Walker into office when Commissioner McLaughlin addressed the higher officers of the force. He was in his office, however, when the Commissioner entered on his way home to extend felicitations for a prosperous new year as he grasped the Chief Inspector's hand. Then, accompanied by his wife, several young women, said to be members of his immediate family, and two men friends, Commissioner McLaughlin hurried out to his automobile, announcing that he "would he on the job bright and early tomorrow morning."

The new Commissioner's induction into office was surrounded by scenes such as had not been witnessed in Police Headquarters for many years. It is doubtful if so many silk hats ever before had been seen in the building. More than 100 of them were seen in the crowd that had gathered in the main lobby an hour before Mr. McLaughlin drove up to formally take over command of the Police Department.

As the Commissioner stepped from his automobile, bearing the gold letters "P. D. C." on a sign of bluish green, there was a rush to greet him. He started ahead of Mrs. McLaughlin and the rest of his party, who were being escorted from the car by Charles G. Young, who until Wednesday was Private Secretary to Mr. Enright, but turned around at the winding storm door and retraced his steps to take Mrs. McLaughlin by the arm.

As he gained the top of the small flight of steps leading to the foyer the crowd parted and formed a lane. Mr. McLaughlin, raising his hat to friends he recognized in the gathering, again hastened ahead and reached the first landing of the grand stairway, where he waited to escort his wife to his office.

Greeted by Enright.

Mr. Enright, surrounded by Deputy Commissioners John Daly and Joseph Faurot, former members of the force, whose status will have to be decided by the new Commissioner in the next few days; John A. Leach, Acting Commissioner for twenty-four hours, until Mr. McLaughlin's appearance, and former Deputy Commissioners William Gillispie and John H. McKay, was seated at the mahogany desk over which he had presided as Police Commissioner for nearly eight years. A little further away were Barron Collier, John M. Shaw and Dr. Carleton Simon, Special Deputy Commissioners, and R. A. C. Smith and George Macdonald, Honorary Commissioners of the Enright régime. Dr. John A. Harriss, T. Coleman du Pont, Edmund A. Guggenheim and Rodman Wanamaker, also Special Deputy Commissioners under Mr. Enright, and Herman A. Metz, John F. Bermingham, William H. Todd and Colonel Walter Scott, the remaining Honorary Police Commissioners under Enright, were not observed in the building during the day.

Mr. Enright arose as the new Commissioner entered and extended his hand in greeting. Then he introduced Commissioner McLaughlin to the rest of the gathering and formally turned over to him his gold badge of office and the keys to the desk and safe. Commissioner McLaughlin acknowledged receipt of these in a book which lay on the desk, and then Mr. Enright said: "Mr. Commissioner, anything I can do for you at any time in the future I shall gladly do."

"I thank you, and I wish you a happy and prosperous New Year," replied Mr. McLaughlin.

Mr. Enright returned the greeting, and then informed Mr. McLaughlin that all the higher officers of tht department were assembled in the trial room.

"Let us go up there right away," said the new Commissioner, and he started for the room on the floor above, outdistancing tht retiring Commissioner at almost every step. The order for the gathering had been issued the night before. It was understood that it had been sent out by Chief Inspector Lahey at the request of Acting Commissioner Leach.

Patrolmen had been stationed at the entrance to the trial room with instructions to permit none to enter except the members of the three highest ranks. Mr. Enright caught up with the new Commissioner by the time they reached the door, and led him to the centre aisle instead of to the dais for the trial Deputy Commissioner. There, facing the gathering, Mr. Enright said: "Gentlemen, permit me to introduce to you the new Police Commissioner, Mr. McLaughlin."

The uniformed heads of the force applauded vigorously, and as Mr. McLaughlin started his brief address his predecessor walked with rapid strides to the entrance, where he was joined by three friends.

Outside the room, Mr. Enright turned to his friends and said: "Well, that's all." There was a hurried trip back to the Commissioner's office, where Mr. Enright gathered up his hat and coat from an anteroom, and within three minutes had walked out of Police Headquarters into Centre Street.

Mr. Enright's former aids, who had participated in the reception to the new Commissioner remained in the office with many friends of the new head of the Police Department until Mr. McLaughlin's return a few minutes later. Mr. McLaughlin greeted many in the gathering with a handshake or a nod of recognition, and collectively wishing them all a happy new year, announced: "Gentlemen, there is work to be taken care of here, and I want to start it."

Commissioner McLaughlin then announced that he would receive the newspaper reporters. It had been a little more than seven years since such an invitation had been extended in that office. After he had handed out copies of his statement, Mr. McLaughlin was asked:

"Have you decided on any appointments of Deputy Commissioners?"

"No," was the reply.

"Are you going to appoint any before you leave here today?"

"No, not today."

"Have you the names of your deputies in mind?"

"No. They will be given out in the next few days."

"Commissioner, what are you going to do about the Special Service Division?"

"I haven't come to that yet."

In reply to another question, Commissioner McLaughlin said that he would arrange for meetings with the newspaper reporters twice each week—one in the morning and the other in the afternoon.

Later, when asked if he had taken any action on the report that cards containing suspected places had disappeared from the Special Service Division, he said: "I know nothing about them. I haven't given them a thought. The matter hasn't been brought to my attention. I will give it thought when I get to it." He added that the rules and regulations of the Police Department would remain in force as under Mr. Enright until he saw fit to change any of them.

The Commissioner's statement that he had been sworn in but a short time before his appearance at Police Headquarters by Mayor Walker disposed of reports that on his departure from headquarters the day before, after a fifteen-minute meeting with Mr. Enright, he had been sworn in as Commissioner by Acting Mayor William T. Collins. Mr. Collins, at a dinner on Wednesday night, announced that he would appoint Mr. McLaughlin in advance of his appointment by Mr. Walker, but it was understood that this was said in a jocular way, and that Mr. McLaughlin could not have accepted appointment because his resignation as head of the State Banking Department did not become effective until 12 o'clock Thursday night.

Despite Mr. McLaughlin's announcement that he had not decided on any of his Deputy Commissioners reports were in circulation in Police Headquarters that Frank A. Lord, Second Deputy Police Commissioner under Commissioner Arthur Woods of the Mitchel Administration, would be appointed First Deputy Commissioner under Mr. McLaughlin and that Inspector John D. Coughlin, head of the Detective Division, would be named as Second Deputy Commissioner in place of former Chief Inspector Daly, one of the Enright appointees.

There was another report that John J. Glynn, nephew of Governor Smith, was to be named secretary to Commissioner McLaughlin. Mr. Glynn also called on Commissioner McLaughlin, accompanied by John J. Curtin, manager of the Walker primary campaign in Brooklyn and legal adviser to the Governor. Inspector Coughlin merely smiled at the coupling of his name with the reports, and Mr. Lord and Mr. Glynn left before they could be asked about them.

BROOKLYN'S NEEDS OUTLINED BY GUIDER

REAPPOINTS HIS STAFF

All but One of Important Officials Stay as He Begins First Elective Term.

Expansion of the educational, transit and park and playground systems of Brooklyn was promised yesterday by Borough President Joseph A. Guider on taking office for his first elective term in Borough Hall.

"The constant increase in the population of our borough and the development of new home areas make it urgent that the administration keep abreast of the need for new streets and sewers," Mr. Guider said. "It is only necessary to point to the vast amount of building construction carried on during the last few years to realize our growth.

"It shall be my purpose to support every movement for additional schools and high schools and transit facilities for the borough where they are most needed. I shall endeavor to obtain at all times sufficient sites for parks and playgrounds. Few other matters are of greater importance than the present traffic situation. The increasing number of motor vehicles on our highways makes it necessary that our streets shall be kept in repair at all times, and many of them will be widened in order to meet the needs of various sections.

"Shortly our people will see the progress of a modern boulevard system tying in all of the important thoroughfares of the borough, and establishing easy access to points in Queens and on Long Island. The widening and improvement of Kings Highway, now nearing completion, linking up with the conduit boulevard, will establish a much needed traffic artery from this borough to Amityville, Long Island. The extension of Flatbush Avenue to Barren Island, now in use, is another direct traffic aid.

"During the past year the ferry service from this point direct to the Rockaways was established. During the coming year we will see the construction of Remsen Boulevard, Linden Boulevard, the shore road extension skirting the bay and by way of Fort Hamilton connecting with Coney Island by means of the other boulevards with the Conduit Boulevard on Long Island. The congestion at Coney Island will be relieved by the widening of Surf Avenue, and connection with the widened Sheepshead Bay Road, Neptune Avenue, West Seventeenth Street and other adjacent thoroughfares. During the past year more than 125 miles of new roads were opened and paved, and this work will be carried on as extensively as our appropriations will permit.

"The new Municipal Building is rapidly nearing completion and it is expected to be ready for occupancy by the various departments early this Summer. The extension of the Coney Island Boardwalk from the foot of Ocean Parkway to Coney Island Avenue is going along as planned, and will be ready for use this Summer. Provision will be made for additional interior baths and it shall be my aim to get appropriations for a new court building to house the County Court and parts of the newly established City Court, together with Special Sessions and the municipal and magistrates' courts."

Mr. Guider announced the reappointment of the important members of his borough staff except James J. Browne, Superintendent of Sewers, who has been appointed Park Commissioner for Brooklyn by Mayor Walker. The reappointments are:

CALDWELL NAMED ON BENCH.

Walker Makes Seven Appointments After His Inauguration.

Immediately following his public induction into office, Mayor James J. Walker made seven appointments yesterday, a Justice of the Court of Special Sessions, three City Magistrates, a Municipal Court Justice and an assistant secretary and an executive secretary in his own office. All the new appointees took the oath with the other new city officials in the Mayor's office.

The appointment of Justice of the Court of Special Sessions to succeed Justice Clarence Edwards of Elmhurst, a $10,000 a year post, went to former Representative Charles Pope Caldwell of Queens. Mr. Caldwell was an independent candidate for Borough President against Maurice E. Connolly, but withdrew in the interest of party harmony at the request of Tammany. His appointment was believed to be partly due to a desire to recognize this service to Senator Walker's campaign for election. Frank X. Sullivan, the Walker Queens primary campaign manager, disclaimed responsibility for this appointment, and declared that he understood that it had been credited to the Connolly organization.

The three Magistrates named were Henry W. Bridges of Richmond, to succeed himself; former State Senator Frank Giorgio of Queens, to succeed Magistrate John Kochendorfer, whose term had expired, and John V. Flood of Manhattan, to succeed Max S. Levine, appointed a Judge of the Court of General Sessions, to succeed Judge Alfred J. Talley, resigned. The salary of a Magistrate is $8,000 a year.

John J. Joyce of Brooklyn was appointed Municipal Court Justice in the First Brooklyn District to succeed James A. Dunne, elected Justice of the Supreme Court. Mr. Joyce was recommended by John H. McCooey, Brooklyn Democratic organization leader. The salary is $9,000 a year.

Miss Mary E. Brennan, senior clerk in the Controller's office, was appointed assistant secretary at $6,300 a year. Miss Brennan has been in the service of the Department of Finance since 1899. Miss Brennan succeeds Miss Frances W. Rokus.

George Collins, a boyhood friend of Mayor Walker and a resident of his home assembly district, was appointed executive secretary to succeed Augustin Kelly. The salary of the place is now $5,300.

The Sullivan faction in Queens is understood to have gained additional recognition by the appointment of John J. Hassettnas, Deputy Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, and James W. Kelly as Deputy Commissioner of Public Welfare, although the appointments were not announced by the Mayor, in pursuance to his general policy of not announcing the appointments of deputies.

Another appointment said to have been agreed upon but not announced was that of Mrs. Minnie J. Abel for a place of importance in the Department of Public Welfare. Mrs. Abel is woman Democratic leader of the Seventeenth Brooklyn Assembly District and was the first woman leader of the McCooey organization to come out in support of Senator Walker during the primary campaign.

An unexpected shift ousted Edward P. Scanlon, secretary to the President of the Board of Aldermen, from a $3,100 post. Mr. Scanlon arrived at the City Hall in the morning and was told by Joseph V. McKee, the new Aldermanic President, that he would not be reappointed. Mr. McKee named as Mr. Scanlon's successor John Carroll, also a resident of the Twentieth Manhattan Assembly District.

It was learned that Mr. Scanlon, who was originally recommended for appointment by the late Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany, had been a candidate for the Tammany leadership of his district against Clarence H. Neal, and during the last campaign supported Daniel Traynor as a candidate for Alderman against Alderman Charles J. McGillick, choice of the organization.

Mr. Neal was reported to have insisted that Mr. Scanlon should not be reappointed, and that one of his supporters in the district should be named in his place.

Jack Callahan, comic artist of the New York American, and Helen Carr, who used to dive from the roof of the Hippodrome in the spectacle "Happy Days," were married Wednesday afternoon at Borough Hall, Brooklyn. They had known each other since childhood. Philip Ponce, a music publisher and song writer, and Miss Jane Gloseman were witnesses.

During her career as a diving girl Helen Carr, a slight, very pretty girl, was noted for her coolness and daring. Twice a day, for several months, she performed "the high dive" at the Hippodrome until the shock affected her eyes. There followed a series of fourteen operations, here and in Germany, all in vain. Mrs. Callahan has been blind for three years.

Mr. Callahan is best known for his comic characters "Hon and Dearie" and "Freddie the Sheik." He told only a few intimate friends of his wedding until yesterday, when the news was made more generally known through announcement cards of his own design bearing the inscription, "Ringing in the New Year," and showing the bride and bridegroom standing together inside a gigantic wedding ring. The couple are living at present at the Hotel Pennsylvania, where Mr. Callahan has resided for several years.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 1.—The body of a man identified as Henry D. Sperber, 34 years old, a magazine writer of New York City, was found on the beach at Maine Avenue early today. A pistol was clasped in his right hand. He had been shot through the heart. Before death he had piled up sand as a cushion for his head and rested his feet on a heavy walking stick. The body was discovered by a policeman patroling the Boardwalk. The dead man was identified by papers in his pockets.

In a note he asked that his effects be given to Miss Julia Marscher, Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, D. C. The note also said his hotel bill had been paid.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1 (AP).—Henry D. Sperber, whose body was found on the beach at Atlantic City, was an author of short stories and had a promising career ahead of him, Miss Julia Marscher, a friend, said today when informed of his death.

Miss Marscher said Sperber had served in the American army in the late war and had contracted tuberculosis overseas. For the last six months, she added, he had been traveling for his health. She had feared he would commit suicide because he had been despondent. Sperber had no living relatives.

BANTON SPURS AIDS FOR FIGHT ON CRIME

Efficiency Will Be Watchword, He Tells Staff as He Begins His Second Term.

65 ASSISTANTS SWORN IN

Prosecutor Urges Them to Fight Cases Hard, With Fewer Adjournments—Will Retire After 4 Years.

Joab H. Banton began his second four-year term as District Attorney of New York County yesterday when he and sixty-five assistants were sworn in before Judge William Allen in the Court of General Sessions. Mr. Banton announced he would retire from public office and resume his private law practice at the end of his present term.

The new Assistant District Attorneys inducted into office yesterday are Eugene J. Finnegan, William Schwartz, Robert Daru, George F. Mara, Sol Streit, Archibald Firestone and Edward V. Loughlin. They succeed seven others who came into office with Mr. Banton, but who are retiring to enter private practice. They are Vincent Auletta, elected Assemblyman from the Eighteenth District; Morgan A. Jones, who has been admitted to the law firm of Hartman, Sheridan & Tekulsky; William F. McKenna, Maurice A. Gilsey, Harry M. Steinhardt, John S. Slattery and Abraham Harris.

Day of Easy Boss Gone.

"The easy boss died at midnight and efficiency came in," Mr. Banton said to his staff. "Don't take anything for granted during the next four years—that is the text. We are going to be in our new quarters across the street by St. Patrick's Day. The office layout there will make for efficiency. I shall be able to check up and know just what every one is doing.

"I want fewer acquittals due to unpreparedness. By properly trying a case that is strong enough for conviction and by properly preparing it in advance, it should be easy to get convictions. It costs $800 a day to run a part of the court, so that when you go into court there should be no case lost by reason of careless preparation.

"We have established quite a good reputation for courtesy. That must continue. You cannot treat the public any old way you like. The people are our clients and they must be treated with the same consideration you would treat your clients if you were in private practice.

"I want witnesses who are brought in here in a case to lose as little time as it is possible to take up getting their stories. See that witnesses for the people are not tired out by continuous adjournments.

Wants Fewer Adjournments.

"Don't let Magistrates adjourn cases too often. Keep right after the cases, and don't let anybody stop you, no matter who he is, and don't be jockeyed into the position of asking that a case which may appear weak be thrown out in a Magistrate's Court. Present all the evidence you have, and if the Magistrate wants to take the responsibility of throwing it out, all right.

"I want this office so conducted for the next four years that the party running for it will be elected on our record of achievement. It's not for myself. I'm holding my last public job. I'm going back to private practice when I get through with this, and I want to take back with me the feeling that I have done my best."

After Mr. Banton had finished, Judge Allen said:

"It is good to hear this heart-to-heart talk of the captain to his team. One thing I would add. Sometimes it has seemed to me that the prosecuting attorney is not aggressive enough in presenting his case to the jury. Don't be backward. Show no quarter to the crook. When you are sure in your heart that the defendant is guilty, flay him. Skin him alive, so that the twelve men in the jury box will see the rascal in all his nakedness."

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Asserting that he had been unable to keep municipal expenses at the lowest figure during his three terms as Mayor because people moving to New Rochelle, who professed to enjoy country life, actually demanded the improvements and service they were accustomed to in New York, Harry Scott, retiring Mayor, today turned the keys of the city over to Mayor Benjamin B. Badeau. Both are Republicans.

The inauguration took place in the City Council Chambers before citizens of the city. It was attended by all of the former Mayors of New Rochelle, including Frederick H. Waldorf, George G. Raymond, Edward S. Griffing and Harry E. Colwell.

It was because of New Rochelle's proximity to New York that it cost so much to run the Government, the retiring Mayor said. People came to the city because of the suburban idea, he declared, but they not only expected all public improvements but demanded them.

Mayor Badeau announced the reappointment of City Clerk William Harman and of Secretary to the Mayor, Harry Cole. At a brief council business meeting after the inaugural addresses Edward Hume was elected President of the Common Council and Edward Remensnyder, Vice President.

Mayor Badeau reiterated his campaign promises, saying improvements would continue, but he avoided his campaign opponent's promises to reduce taxes. Mayor Badeau asserted that most of the improvements now under way were under the streets, such as sewer extensions, and therefore not fully appreciated by taxpayers.

Yonkers Mayor Inducted.

A large crowd saw Mayor William A. Walsh, Democrat, inducted yesterday into office for a two-year term as Mayor of Yonkers.

He succeeds Mayor Ulrich Wiesendanger, who was present at the inauguration. Mayor Walsh, who was formerly a city Judge and also Corporation Counsel of Yonkers, was elected by a large majority, and residents are looking to him to tighten the reins on the Police and Fire Departments and put the lid on bootlegging and gambling. The bus situation has become a leading question, with the Yonkers Railroad Company fighting independent bus owners. Mayor Walsh has instructed his Corporation Counsel, Arthur C. Hume, New York lawyer, to give special study to this problem.

After being sworn into office by City Clerk John S. Kettell, the new Mayor and his Cabinet held a reception in the Mayor's office in the City Hall. Several hundred persons attended.

Mayor Walsh's new Cabinet includes Mr. Hume, former Police Inspector William H. Van Keuren of New York, Public Safety Commissioner; William Goldsmith, Public Works Commissioner; Mrs. Mattie E. Truman, Charities Commissioner; Mrs. Catherine Critchley, Deputy Charities Commissioner, and J. Sheridan, City Engineer.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Mayor Frederick C. McLaughlin, of this city, was inducted into office this afternoon at his home, 59 Hamilton Avenue, with simple ceremonies. There was no speech-making and very few of his personal friends and Republican leaders were present when the outgoing Mayor, Frederick E. Week's turned over to him the keys to the city. Mayor McLaughlin took the oath of office two weeks ago.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies the Mayor said he would continue in office all those holding positions now and that there would be no new apointments.

MAYOR DALTON SWORN AGAIN AT LONG BEACH

Appoints J. F. Sweeney, Former Inspector Here, to Be Chief of Police.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BEACH, N. Y., Jan. 1.—William J. Dalton, re-elected Mayor of Long Beach over former Mayor William H. Reynolds at the last election, was formally inducted into office at noon today with the other elected city officials. They were sworn in by City Clerk Ernest L'Allman in Community Hall. About 200 persons, including less than half a dozen former Reynolds supporters, attended the ceremonies, which were simple. Mayor Dalton outlined some of the policies of the coming Administration.

The elected officials other than the Mayor who took office were Francis J. Hogan, City Judge; Thomas J. Hogan, Supervisor; Thomas Atherton Cook, Tax Assessor, and James Powers, Louis H. Saltzman and Charles L. Daly, Councilmen.

Following his inauguration, Mayor Dalton announced the selections for his Cabinet, the most interesting being that of John F. Sweeney, former New York City Police Inspector, to be the first Chief of Police of Long Beach. The Long Beach police force has hitherto been commanded by Captain Barriscale, a Reynolds supporter, who resigned about a month ago. Chief Sweeney has been a captain of the local force.

Other appointments announced by Mayor Dalton were James J. Farrell, City Treasurer; Simon Moses Sapinsky, Corporation Counsel; Maurice Rubinger, Special Counsel; J. Charles Zimmerman and Charles Weg, Acting City Judges; Harry Budwig, Commissioner of Charity; George J. Kunz, Fire Commissioner; Henry Herzog, Chief of Long Beach's volunteer Fire Department, as Superintendent of Sewers; Fred Wehman, Sealer of Weights and Measures, and William J. Power as Commissioner of Public Works. Mr. Power, it was said, might not accept the office.

CALLS MATRIMONY A DIFFICULT SCIENCE

New Italian Philosopher Says Marriage Is Also the Finest of All the Arts.

ROME, Jan. 1 (AP).—Matrimony is the most difficult of all sciences and the finest of all arts, according to a new Italian philosopher, who has been discovered in the person of Celestino Fabietti, for 23 years bearer of the sonorous title, "Custodian of the Ante-Chamber of the Marriage Clerk" of Rome's City Hall.

Fabietti, on the advice of some of the hundreds of thousands of Romans who have grown to know him during his long tenureship of office, is considering writing a philosophical autobiography.

Men, asserts Fabietti, are much more afraid of marriage than women. Sometimes, he says, it has taken all of his great tact and skillful diplomacy to prevent reluctant bachelors from bolting before their turn came to face the marriage clerk.

Other of his authoritative opinions are:

"To know how to be a husband or a wife is a profession in itself.

"The best way to read a person's character is to listen to him pronounce the fatal 'yes'."

the street, was thrown open and a large number of injured were given first aid by physicians called from the crowd.

Hospitals Overflow.

At the receiving hospital, where only ten or twelve persons could be treated at one time, it was necessary to divert the cars to the Pasadena Hospital, the only institution of its kind in Pasadena. Calls for assistance were sent to Los Angeles and near-by towns, and ambulances were soon forthcoming with physicians and nurses.

At the Pasadena Hospital, where accommodations for such a large number of patients were not available, a truck was sent to a furniture house for mattresses, and within half an hour the floors of the halls of the hospitals were covered with injured persons lying on the mattresses.

A large number of the injured were elderly persons and women and children, who had preference in the seats from which the best view could be obtained.

A warm, sunny day had resulted in the turning out of one of the greatest throngs that ever witnessed a Tournament of Roses parade, and many temporary stands were erected on vacant lots and on front lawns, in which seats were sold to those who wanted the best possible view.

Of those injured, many were from other towns and cities. It was impossible to obtain an accurate check of all the victims, many of whom were taken directly to Los Angeles when it was evident that the hospital facilities here were overtaxed.

W. F. Vail, general manager of the Pasadena Hospital, took personal charge of arrangements and called his entire staff of nurses and assistants, many of whom were witnessing the parade. A motorcycle officer was dispatched down the line of parade, calling for doctors, and within an hour or so scores of physicians were at the hospital.

When word of the accident spread thousands of persons swarmed toward the hospital and it took the efforts of many police officers to prevent a panic among those anxious for the safety of relatives and friends.

Surgeons late today reported two of the injured in danger of death. They are Mrs. C. E. Dixon of Eagle Rock, Los Angeles, and Mrs. Lucinda Crown of Watts, near here.

An account of the accident was given by H. P. Bee, publisher of The Culver City Call, who occupied a seat on the twenty-seventh row of the grandstand.

"I felt a quiver of the stand and saw it slowly giving way and sliding toward the right-hand corner," he said. "It quivered for a moment while spectators tried to leap to safety. Then the whole stand groaned under its weight of humanity and fell with a crash. The rows of people who a moment before sat watching the passing of the parade were thrown into a mass of broken timbers and cracking boards.

"One could see men, women and children buried beneath the timbers and arches. The air was filled with horrible cries as those from the upper seats fell down on those underneath, adding to the weight."

EXCHANGE GREETING WITH LONDON ON AIR

that London was coming in distinctly. Hammond, N. Y., on the other hand, reported that the American program was "great," but there was "a weak English reception."

Highpoint, N. C.—Enjoyed English broadcasting.

Lynchburg, Va.—London very clear.

Philadelphia—Received England very clear without any static.

Bridgeport, Conn.—Heard "When You and I Were Seventeen" at 7:30.

Atlantic City—Reception of London broadcast wonderful, using two-tube set with loudspeaker.

Pine Bluff, Ark.—Announcement and music from London rebroadcast by you heard clearly.

Hattiesburg, Miss.—"When You and I Were Seventeen," relayed through your station from London, came in clear as a bell.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—Reception fine.

Other cities which reported hearing London were Springfield, Mass.; Roanoke, Va.; Amsterdam, N. Y.; New Bedford, Mass.; Harrisburg, Pa.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Moundsville, W. Va.; Miami, Fla.; Pensacola, Fla.; Baltimore, Hot Springs, Ark.; Cleveland, Ohio; Charleston, S. C.; Rochester, N. Y., and New Orleans.

Heard by Ships at Sea.

Ships at sea also sent word they had listened to both the New York and London programs. These included the Adriatic, George Washington, City of Columbus and many smaller vessels.

Late last night Buenos Aires reported that it had heard the program at times, but not clearly because of static.

"We are listening to KDKA [Pittsburgh]. Cannot understand speakers," said the message from South America.

Bermuda reported that it heard both the New York and London programs distinctly.

The following cablegram was received from A. G. D. West, assistant chief engineer of the British Broadcasting Company, in England:

"We listened ourselves to your rebroadcasting of our program."

Radio officials said that this was the first time in the history of radio communication that a rebroadcast program had been heard across the Atlantic at the point where it had originated.

An earlier cablegram showed that the beginning of the American program had been transmitted successfully across the ocean:

"BBC advises WJZ was heard OK Chelmsford, Essex and London."

The American program began at 6:15 o'clock with an address by David Sarnoff, Vice President and general manager of the Radio Corporation of America, broadcast from the WJZ studio.

Different Lands United.

He said in part:

"Practically all the resources of present day radio broadcasting and radio communication, for both transmission and reception, have been marshalled together for this event. For the first time, through the agency of radio communication, different people in different lands, from many different points of the clock, are united upon the very same instant in a common purpose.

"The great significance of the demonstration which radio broadcasting is making tonight is in the vista which is opened of national as well as world service by radio. Superpower broadcasting brings into view that exchange of national cultures which can only serve to enrich and strengthen our own institutions. It brings into view a national broadcasting service that will transmit to every home in the land the cultural and educational advantages developed by the best thought of the nation. It brings into view a system of service by radio, which will help to place the most modest home in the village or on the farm on a par, culturally and educationally, with the richest home in the metropolitan city.

"To that portion of the world which hears my voice and through you to the rest of the world, I extend a hearty American handclasp and a happy New Year greeting. My earnest hope is that radio, which is destined to serve mankind in os many ways, will bring you a full measure of happiness."

Next came the broadcasting of "international good wishes" to the people of various countries in their own language, which also was translated into English by interpreters. These addresses were made by Consul General Olaf Lamm of Sweden, Consul General Maxine Mongendri of France, Consul General Hirosi Saito of Japan, Consul General Thaddeus Marynowski of Poland, Vice Consul Ramirez Montesinos of Spain and Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, chief broadcast engineer of the RCA, for Germany.

Godfrey Ludlow, violinist, played while the radio men were trying to get the London signals loudly enough to rebroadcast by station WGY in Schenectady between 7:30 and 7:50. Next there was a program by the Eastman Theatre symphony orchestra of Rochester, N. Y., broadcast by Station WGY in Schenectady. It was this music which England heard, according to later cablegrams.

Most of the rest of the program was broadcast by Station WJZ. It included musical numbers by the Shannon male quartet, Neapolitan trio, Florentine string trio, reading of news dispatches by Kent Cooper, general manager of The Associated Press; music by the United States Marine Band (broadcast from Station WRC, Washington) and, finally, the "Victor Hour," with McCormack, Bori and the Victor Orchestra, led by Joseph Pasternack, ending with the Park Avenue carillon.

The nine stations hooked up in the United States were WJZ, New York; WGY, Schenectady; WRC, Washington; WBZ, Springfield, Mass.; KDKA, Pittsburgh; KYW, Chicago; KFKX, Hastings, Neb.; KOA, Denver, and KGO, Oakland, Cal.

In the London-New York broadcasting, the music was picked up at the Club Ciro, London, by a microphone, carried to Station 2LO, London, by ordinary land wire; broadcast throughout England, then sent to Station 5XX, a superpower station on the English coast, which transmitted it on a 1,600-meter wave length across the ocean. It was picked up at Belfast, Me., put through a super-heterodyne receiving set and transmitted by radio at 70 meters to the Radio Corporation laboratory at Van Cortlandt Park.

There it was picked up by a receiving set, whose output was connected by land with WJZ and with Station 2XAR, the new WJZ superpower broadcasting transmitter at Bound Brook, N. J., which broadcast it to the other American stations on the hook-up. All this took place within the fraction of a second.

CHARGE POLICEMAN SHOT BOY IN BRAWL

VICTIM'S COUSIN ARRESTED

Patrolman McCabe, Off Duty, Says He Was Trying to Quell Row After a Shot Was Fired.

Patrolman James J. McCabe of the Bronx Park Station was held on a charge of felonious assault yesterday, which will be changed to homicide today, following the death in Fordham Hospital of an eighteen-year-old youth, who was shot in a brawl early yesterday morning in the Fontaine Club, a night restaurant, at 387 East Fordham Road, the Bronx.

The victim of the quarrel which broke up the New Year's celebration was Ward Tierney of 111 Wadsworth Avenue. Despite a blood transfusion, hurriedly arranged, in which the wounded man's cousin, Matthew Tierney, 25 years old, of 937 East 172d Street, the Bronx, supplied his blood, the youth died at midafternoon. Matthew Tierney, who was bitten in the ear during the brawl, remained a prisoner at the hospital, charged with assaulting the arrested policeman.

According to Assistant District Attorney William G. Kier, who was summoned to the scene of the shooting immediately, a rousing party had been in progress in the club, which is on the second floor of the building, entered either on East Fordham Road or around the corner on Decatur Avenue.

Various versions of what followed were given to the police. McCabe insisted that he had left the room before there was any quarreling. He said that he had been invited to a party at the club by Bernard Schneider, clerk of the Bronx Children's Court, and had accepted, since he was going off duty at midnight and was not due to report for reserve duty until 4 o'clock. After staying from 1:15 until 2:15 with Mr. and Mrs. Schneider, he said he was going downstairs to leave by the Decatur Avenue entrance when he heard a shot.

According to the policeman's story, two men then rushed out and McCabe fired a shot in the air after them when they refused to stop. Coming back to the club's side entrance, he was met by the rest of the revelers, whom he commanded to stop, he said. The rest of his account was to the effect that Matthew Tierney then struck him and as they fell tussling, all the others escaped. Patrolmen Quigley and Schopland of the Bronx Park station found them rolling upon the sidewalk.

Ward Tierney was shot, the witnesses said, not in the restaurant but at the Decatur Avenue door, where it was indicated that a quarrel with McCabe might have been resumed. Tierney was found stretched in the doorway and was carried upstairs with a bullet wound in his abdomen. The shot, which McCabe admitted firing, took the life of Tierney, it was charged. The policeman's pistol could not be found. An autopsy will be performed today which will determine whether the bullet which killed the youth was of .32-calibre size or the regulation .38-calibre used by the police. Powder marks on Tierney's clothes showed that the shot was fired at close quarters.

When the policemen on duty arrived Matthew Tierney was arrested and together with McCabe and Ward Tierney, who was found at the top of the stairs, was taken to the Fordham Hospital. McCabe was then allowed to go home and was arrested later. He was held in $5,000 bail by Magistrate August W. Glatzmayer in Morrisania Court. He is 30 years old and married. He will be rearraigned in the Homicide Court today.

BURBANK ANNOUNCES A NEW RAINBOW CORN

SANTA ROSA, Cal., Jan. 1 (AP).—With the completion of one of the busiest years in his half century of work in the laboratory of nature, Luther Burbank today presented to the world as a New Year's gift a beautiful group of new flowers and plants.

He announced that during the year just closed he had perfected seven major creations and improvements. Today he sent to all parts of the world thousands of seeds which will bear these new creations.

After twenty-six years of experimentation Mr. Burbank has created a new camassia, a striking blue flower. While the camassia is not widely known, the new product excels all others in its beauty and ability to multiply.

From his rainbow corn Burbank has produced the rainbow teosinte, a marvelous plant that grows eight feet tall and bears from eight to fourteen ears to each stalk.

Third is a new giant cactus flowering zinnia, a truly giant plant developed from a more familiar flower.

Others are a new hybrid tritomas, a new specie of the torch lily, which will bloom profusely in cold climates; a new and improved strain of the popular Shasta daisy, much larger and more colorful than the present Shasta; a new strain of fluffy giant asters and the perfection of eight newly-named gladioli.

MOSUL LIKELY TO BE A PERMANENT SORE

TURK STATEMENT RIDICULED

It Is Called an Aggregation of Useless Arguments, Hoping One Will Be Good.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—Mosul apparently will take its place as one of the permanent international sores in the world's international politics. Like Bessarabia and many other districts, its legal ownership will be in dispute, but a status quo may be established for years without there being any serious attempt to upset it.

These are the deductions drawn in authoritative quarters from the official declaration of policy made yesterday in behalf of the Turkish Government. It contained, simultaneously, an admission that it was impossible for the Turks at the moment to endeavor to alter the actual condition and a reiteration of their claims to the disputed territory and formal notice that they would revive them at a favorable opportunity.

The practical result of the declaration is considered here to be that Angora will do nothing to invite negotiations with Britain, and the position of Mosul will remain unchanged until a new turn in events in that part of the world.

Mustpha Kemal's tactics, it is admitted are natural enough. He must consider his own prestige at home. Among his countrymen he has given the Mosul question great importance. He finds himself checkmated at Geneva, and all he can do is, by strong asservations, to try to keep up his own reputation as a great patriotic leader and trust that in the near future something will happen to cause the whole question to drop from popular remembrance.

Britain, at any rate, is quite unlikely to force negotiations upon him. It has twice been pointed out here that she has given the Angora Government a chance to try to find a compromise. Sir Austen Chamberlain held out the olive branch at Geneva. Stanley Baldwin, with his characteristic love of pacific methods, took the unusual step of summoning the Turkish Ambassador, explaining personally the British desire to find a peaceful solution. To neither gesture has there been any response from Angora, and there is frank indisposition in British circles to do anything else. Britain, it is maintained here, must remember her own prestige and cannot continue forever trying to help Mustapha Kemal to save his face.

As for the arguments put forward in the Turkish statement, they are regarded here as a curious medley of irrelevant contentions, thrown together without consideration of time, place or general political conditions.

What have the reasons which drove the Turkish Empire into war on the German side in 1914 got to do with the claims of the Turkish Republic to a strip of territory in 1926? How could France and Britain consult the Turks about the Sykes-Picot agreement when they were at war with her?

The Turks, it is held here, have resorted to an old political trick in piling together half a dozen worthless arguments in the hope that the public will believe they have made one good one.

Nevertheless, a few points about the Turkish document are interesting. It cites the Turkish agreement with Soviet Russia, but says nothing which suggests that those "secret clauses," of which the Turkish press has been hinting, have any existence. Secondly, Angora evidently is taking note of Italian aspirations to a greater Italy. It has gone so far as to compare its own with the Italian military strength, and sees enough in the idea of an empire of Italy to give it serious consideration.

Turks Talk of Soviet Alliance.

LONDON, Jan. 1 (AP).—In the first of a series of articles from Angora, capital of the Turkish Republic, published by the Westminster Gazette, J. Alfred Spender, editor of the paper, expresses the opinion that in the sharp struggle between prudence and precipitancy, for the present at any rate, prudence seems to have won for the time being.

He says the talk is all of an alliance with Russia for the "redemption of the eastern world from British imperialism," but he finds it difficult to believe in any long-standing intimacy between the Russians and Turks because Mustapha Kemal Pasha, President of Turkey, would not for a moment tolerate communism in Turkey. Kemal also would need to be very sure that the Russians would go away again before he invited them to come to his assistance.

Mr. Spender thinks the Turkish method will be rather to make constant trouble on the Iraq border and so render Mosul a very uncomfortable and expensive possession.

DENIES DIVORCING YESSININ.

Isadora Duncan Attributes Suicide to a 'Fit of Madness.'

CAGNES, France, Jan. 1 (AP).—Isadora Duncan, the dancer, blames the recent suicide of Sergei Yessinin, on a "passing fit of madness," coupled with a distaste for a materialistic world. She denied that she was estranged from the poet, saying: "He is still my husband. I only left Moscow on account of money difficulties and always wanted to return to Russia to work with him. One of his last poems was dedicated to me 'To Isadora, alone worthy of being loved by the poet.'

"Yessinin despaired of life in a world where so few persons cared about art. He must have taken his life during a passing fit of madness. My consolation lies in the thought that his poems will survive his tragic death."

Sergie Yessinin committed suicide in Leningrad on Dec. 28, cutting his wrists and hanging himself. He and Miss Duncan were married in 1922, and last year reports that the dancer had been granted a divorce from Yessinin by the Soviet authorities in Moscow were confirmed by members of the Duncan family.

BRITAIN IS HOPEFUL OVER 1926 OUTLOOK

Unemployment Has Fallen and Trade Is Reviving—No Vital Foreign Problems.

Coal and Budget Questions Are Seen as the Only Disturbing Factors.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—Moderate hopefulness is the spirit in which Englishmen are facing the new year. With unemployment figures fallen on Dec. 21 to just over 1,100,000, that is 25,000 less than the week before, with comparative industrial peace and definite signs of some trades reviving, they begin to hope that the worst depression has passed and that industry has turned definitely in the right direction.

They can reckon on some clear cases of prosperity. The motor trade is booming, the manufacture of artificial silk and wireless accessories and the growing of beet sugar have appeared as welcome additions to British industries. A remarkable increase in the demand for pig iron, the large orders placed by the railroads for new rolling stock and the slight revival of shipbuilding have offset to some extent the continued hard times in the cotton districts and the grave conditions in the steel towns. Trade unions, too, seem less belligerently inclined and the assent of the railway unions to a reduction of pay for new employes after February is the first real victory for the principle of settling industrial disputes by negotiation.

But as soon as the Englishman begins to run over these matters in his mind, he is always brought up short by the grave coal trouble. Even as he begins to dare to hope his spirits are dampened by the thought of what the month of May will bring forth. To many it seems that the bottom has fallen out of the mining industry because of new world conditions. And on mining a great share of British prosperity depends.

The Coal Commission is still sitting and the Government is still paying a heavy subsidy to keep the mines open. Before many weeks the commission must report, and the Government will if possible put a term to the subsidy. What will happen then, and how will the miners, under the influence of the wild counsels of "Emperor Cook," act? Will other trades unions join in and precipitate a general strike? That is the great issue before the country and, however the questions are answered, it is more than likely there will be renewed controversy over the nationalization of the mines.

That seems the most probable question to enliven an unusually dull political horizon. With the Government apparently safe in office, with the regular financial business due to take up the time of the House of Commons until Easter, there is little in sight to stir the minds of politicians. Of course, the annual question of the budget will begin to loom large as soon as the House meets. Grave fears are felt that Winston Churchill, faced with an enormous coal subsidy—making further savings of moment in the Government's running expenses difficult—will raise the income tax again, but whatever he does in that line will not affect for a moment the stability of the present Administration.

But the duller Parliament is on the surface, and the more hopeless the position seems of the two oppositions the greater will be the political activity behind the scenes. None of the three parties, not even the Unionists, are united. Ramsay MacDonald is under continual fire from the Extremist Labor backbenchers. Lloyd George is trying hard to find out with which group he will be finally aligned, and Stanley Baldwin is quite conscious that his determined conciliatoriness satisfies neither the former Coalition nor the Diehard wings of his followers.

The lobbies of the Commons will be full of rumors of new combinations, but unless the coal crisis or another of the Premier's indiscreet speeches applies a match to inflammable elements, party politics are like to smoulder without an actual blaze for some months yet.

In the foreign field the country believes it is entering a period of peace. The much-abused term "spirit of Locarno" has indeed removed from the average man's sight any immediate and pressing foreign problem. Relations with France and Germany, regularized by the Dawes agreement and the Treaty of London, have not had time to get into a difficulty again. The Mosul trouble is dismissed by the man in the street with a supercilious assumption that the Turks are not strong enough to give much trouble, and as serious as the condition of China is to British manufacturers it is too far away to be realized except by the experts. Even Ireland is quiet for the moment, though the latest "final settlement" left a good deal of latent resentment on all sides.

As for the prospect of disarmament, holding out, as it does, a prospect of lower taxation, it will be welcome in all quarters, until some of its implications, foreshadowed by the Geneva questionnaire, are understood and found to touch Englishmen's prejudices. Meanwhile, though the bank rate is high, the embargo on foreign lendings has been taken off. Business in the City is good, especially the rubber market, and financiers are beginning cautiously to proclaim that the gold standard has justified itself.

So on all sides, though after twelve years of adversity no one is inclined to be too optimistic, there is in England today a feeling that the country is showing satisfactory signs of renewing its strength, and it will be possible to watch the Australian test cricket matches and the expected great contest between Miss Helen Wills and Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen at Wimbledon with England's usual equanimity.

COAL MEN LEAVE FOR HOME.

Operators and Miners to Resume Wage Parley Here on Tuesday.

Negotiations for a settlement of the strike of 150,000 anthracite miners which were begun here on Tuesday and adjourned on Thursday evening will be resumed next Tuesday at the Union League Club. Most of the negotiators spent New Year's Day with their families, leaving here Thursday night or early yesterday morning. John L. Lewis, President of the United Mine Workers, was the only one of the spokesmen for either side to remain in New York. He spent the holiday with friends here.

The official statement issued jointly by the conferees at their adjournment did not indicate which side made the first move to suspend negotiations, but it was reported yesterday that the action was initiated by the mine owners, and that their representatives expect to hold informal conferences before the joint proceedings are resumed.

AUTO DEATHS RISE THROUGHOUT NATION

787 KILLED IN CHICAGO

New York, With 810 in Ten Months, Is One of Few Cities to Show a Decrease.

CHICAGO, Jan. 1 (AP).—Automobiles took a far heavier toll of human life in 1925 than in the preceding year, figures gathered by The Associated Press from a number of the larger cities indicate. Many of the metropolitan centres, with a few notable exceptions, were in the column of heavier fatalities, while a number of the smaller cities reported a slight increase from 1924.

Thirty of the cities from which figures were obtained showed total deaths for 1925 of 4,411, in one of them the figures covering only ten months and in two eleven months for each. In this group the total increase in fatalities for 1925 over 1924 was 369.

In a group of representative cities forty reported a heavier death toll for the year just ended, while in twenty the death list was approximately the same or somewhat lower. In a number of the latter places, however, the statistics did not cover the entire year.

Chicago and its suburbs reported 787 fatalities in 1925, against 703 the previous year. In the first ten months of 1925 there were 810 deaths in New York City, against 808 for the same period in 1924.

Out of ten important Pacific Coast cities, only Los Angeles and San Francisco, the largest, showed decreases. Increases were noted in virtually every instance where the figures were analyzed by larger geographic units. Out of eleven leading Ohio cities, only one, Youngstown, showed a decrease.

Of ten leading cities in the South, all but two reported more fatalities. For Virginia, for eight months deaths in 1925 totaled 160 against 141 for the same period in 1924. In North Carolina the jump was from 337 to 351.

Six large cities in Kansas reported a 1925 toll of seventy-five to fifty-four. In Connecticut there were 350 deaths, an increase of forty-eight; five out of seven leading communities in Michigan reported increases.

Fatalities in the Northeastern States were approximately 4 per cent. greater than in 1924, according to figures from twenty-nine representative cities and towns in New York, New Jersey and the New England States, and for Connecticut as a whole. The fatalities in this territory totaled 1,894 for 1925, while the total for 1924 was 1,823.

Schooner Wrecked, Crew Safe.

BOSTON, Jan. 1 (AP).—The schooner Atlantic Coast, bound from San Juan, Porto Rico, to Boca Grande, Fla., went aground yesterday near Baracoa, Cuba, and will be a total loss, a message received today by her owners, the New England Maritime Company of Boston, reported. The vessel was light. Captain Kendall A. Nash and his crew landed safely.

SHENANDOAH COURT CONDEMNS CHANGES

States Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J., was completed in 1923, made its first flight on Sept. 4, 1923, and was commissioned as the U. S. S. Shenandoah in October of the same year.

4. In the design of the Shenandoah approximately 4 per cent. more of the total lift was assigned to the hull structure and fittings than in the design of certain foreign rigid airships for which comparative figures were available. As finally completed, the weight of the ship exceeded the designed weight by approximately 1 per cent.

5. The only major casualty suffered by the Shenandoah prior to the start of the Midwest flight occurred in January, 1924, when it was torn from the mooring mast at Lakehurst by stress of weather. The ship was thoroughly inspected and repaired after this accident.

6. Prior to the Midwest flight, the Shenandoah had cruised a total of approximately 740 hours in the air, covering approximately 25,835 statute ground miles, of which 605¼ hours and 20,761 miles, including a transcontinental flight, was made subsequent to Jan. 16, 1924.

7. A majority of the officers and crew had served in the Shenandoah continuously from the time of commissioning up to and including the Midwest flight of Sept. 2, 1925. Many of these had received previous training on rigid airships abroad.

8. In accordance with the provisions of the National Defense act of 1920, and upon recommendation of the Joint Army and Navy Board, approved by the Secretaries of War and Navy, the navy was charged with the sole responsibility for the procurement and development of rigid airships for use over both land and water.

9. The U. S. S. Los Angeles was obtained through an international agreement that it should be used for commercial purposes only and was assigned to the navy for operation. The navy is charged with the development of rigid airships for commercial as well as for military purposes.

OPINIONS.

1. The Shenandoah represented the best practices in design and construction at the period of its building.

2. The proportionately greater weight for structure and fittings of the Shenandoah resulted in increased strength.

3. The damage to the Shenandoah due to breaking away from the Lakehurst mooring mast was fully repaired and no loss of strength ensued as a result thereof.

4. The officers and crew of the Shenandoah were skilled and competent operators of rigid airships.

5. The operation of right airships over land, as well as over the sea, is a proper and powerful function of the navy.

FACTS.

10. The Navy Department had received 248 requests from public officers, public and semi-public bodies and individuals for a flight of a rigid airship over the Middle West.

11. On June 7, 1925, in obedience to orders from the Navy Department, the Los Angeles started a flight to Minneapolis, but due to engine trouble returned to Lakehurst in accordance with the decision of the commanding officer after completing only the first part of the flight.

12. On June 9 the Chief of Naval Operations informed the commanding officer of the United States Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, and the commanding officer of the Shenandoah that that airship, which was then deflated, would be ordered to make the trip previously scheduled for the Los Angeles as soon as the former could be made ready, helium transferred and the airship placed in active service.

13. In letter dated June 15 the commanding officer of the Shenandoah recommended that such a flight be postponed until September on account of the probability of unfavorable weather conditions in the Midwest during July and August. Prior to the receipt of this letter the Chief of Naval Operations had issued orders, dated June 19, for a flight over the Midwest by the Shenandoah as soon as ready.

14. Upon its receipt the letter to the commanding officer of the Shenandoah of June 15 was considered by both the Chief of Naval Operations and the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics. As a result the commanding officer of the Shenandoah was ordered to Washington for consultation. On June 30 the consultation was held, at which the Chief of Naval Operations, the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, the commanding officer of the Shenandoah and the head of the Ships' Movement Division of Operations were present.

15. As a result of this conference the orders of June 19 were revoked.

16. A mooring mast for rigid airships had been erected at Detroit, Mich., by Henry Ford, and was completed about July 9. The Navy Department had been requested to send a rigid airship to Detroit to test this mast, the first to be erected in this country by private enterprise.

17. In letter dated July 20 the Chief of Naval Operations directed the commanding officer of the Shenandoah to submit an itinerary for a Midwest flight to pass over as many of certain specified cities as practicable on dates in the early part of September, when State and county fairs were scheduled to be held, and to test the mooring mast at Detroit.

18. In reply dated Aug. 4 the commanding officer of the Shenandoah recommended two separate flights, the first during the last week in August to Detroit to test the new mooring mast and the second beginning Sept. 7 over the entire route covering the specified cities.

19. The Chief of Naval Operations after consultation with the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, directed one flight only in lieu of two, this flight to begin Sept. 2. The orders dated Aug. 12 directed this flight.

OPINIONS.

6. The commanding officer of the Shenandoah was fully consulted and given every opportunity to state his views in regard to the midwest flight.

7. The commanding officer of the Shenandoah did not at any time express opposition to or any reluctance in undertaking the flight beginning Sept. 2 on the ground of possible adverse weather conditions.

8. The object of the midwest flight was threefold, viz.: to test the mooring mast at Detroit, to continue training of personnel and to comply with many requests received from citizens of that section of the country that such a flight be made.

9. While recognizing the propriety and necessity of the legally constituted authorities in the naval service being the sole judges of the sufficiency of the reasons actuating all orders to naval craft, and further recognizing that the practice of ordering movements of naval vessels for the purpose of complying with public requests is in accord with long-established custom, it is considered that such movements should be limited to essentially naval and military operations in so far as possible, especially in the case of new and experimental types.

FACTS.

20. The ship was fully manned and equipped and in material readiness for flight.

21. Frequent and careful inspection of the entire structure of the ship had been made throughout its life. In addition material similar to that in the structure of the ship had been kept under observation and been subjected to tests under instructions of the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics.

22. Extensive tests of material selected from widely separated parts of the structure after the wreck were made by the Bureau of Standards.

23. Both sets of tests have shown a limited deterioration of the material in the form of intercrystalline corrosion, which deterioration to the extent found does not affect in any substantial degree the ultimate tensile or compressive strength or the modulus of elasticity of the material but does largely reduce its ductility.

24. The design of the structure of the Shenandoah was based on ultimate failure of individual girders in compression. The design of these individual girders was such that under compression they would fall through flexure by instability. This failure would occur before the stress in the separate members of the girder had reached the elastic limit of the material and was therefore dependent upon the modulus of elasticity only and not upon the ultimate strength of the material.

25. In letter dated Sept. 16, 1924, the commanding officer of the Shenandoah first proposed certain changes in the system of gas valves of that ship and subsequently renewed his recommendations in letters dated Dec. 15, 1924, Jan. 9 and May 12, 1925, and in telephone conversation of May 28, 1925. The commanding officer of the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, concurred in this recommendation. Although the Bureau of Aeronautics at first questioned the advisability of this change, it finally approved it in letter of May 28, as an experimental installation, and in letter of June 13 transmitted to the commanding officer of the Shenandoah a design memorandum showing the effect of this change in reduction of the maximum safe rate of rise above pressure height of an airship so equipped. This change, involving a reduction in number of automatic valves, was made the latter part of May and early part of June. As a result the Shenandoah was equipped with automatic valves in gas cells Nos. 4, 5, 8, 9, 12, 13, 16 and 17 and with manoeuvring valves in gas cells Nos. 4, 6, 7, 10, 11, 14, 15 and 18. Subsequent to this change and prior to the midwest flight the Senandoah had cruised about 186 hours, covering about 6,750 statute ground miles, not including midwest flight.

26. Certain other changes, not contemplated in the original design, including removal of No. 6 engine, installation of water recovery apparatus, removal of manometers due to the fact that no entirely satisfactory type has yet been developed and other minor alterations, were made subsequent to the completion of the Shenandoah.

27. The Shenandoah was equipped with only two parachutes, which were carried for the purpose of landing personnel in order to make ground preparations in case it became necessary on any flight to make an emergency landing at a point where preparations had not previously been made.

28. The manual of the Bureau of Aeronautics required: "Parachutes—(a) Parachutes will be worn by all personnel in all types of aircraft when available. Specific exemptions may be made by commanding officers when their use increases the hazards of the personnel." The established practice at the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, on both the Shenandoah and the Los Angeles was to carry only two parachutes.

29. The officers and crew of the Shenandoah were well organized, well trained and highly skilled in performance of their duties.

OPINIONS.

10. Deterioration of structural material was not a direct or indirect cause of the loss of the ship.

11. The deterioration shown to exist was not due to local causes but was generally distributed throughout the structure. It was not due to any lack of care or inspection in its manufacture and fabrication nor to neglect of proper measures for care and preservation in the ship after completion.

12. The court concurs in the opinions of expert witnesses that the rate of deterioration would not affect the safety of the structure of an airship for a much longer period than that covered by the life of the Shenandoah.

13. Material of this character will, until more thoroughly known and understood, require careful handling and observation during fabrication and while in service, but no evidence adduced before this court indicates that its use in the structure of rigid airships is unsafe or inadvisable.

14. The court concurs in the opinions of all qualified experts in the operation of rigid airships, who appeared before it, that the wearing of the present type of parachutes would add to the general risks and hazards of handling such ships due to their interference, especially in emergencies, with the quick and efficient performance of duty by the personnel. The court is, therefore, of the opinion that the judgment of the commanding officer in regard to carrying parachutes was sound. The present practice is adequately covered by the paragraph in the Manual of the Bureau of Aeronautics quoted in F-28.

15. None of the changes referred to in F-26 were contributory to the loss of the ship. The successful development of a thoroughly dependable type of manometer or gas pressure gauge giving accurate readings in the control car for each gas cell would be a contribution to safe operation of rigid airships.

16. Every effort should be made to develop and perfect such type of parachute as could be worn in an emergency without undue handicap in the performance of duty.

IV. The flight from start to about 5:22 A. M. (Eastern Standard Time), Sept. 3, 1925.

FACTS.

30. The flight was made in obedience to lawful orders, issued by competent authority and containing a prudential clause as follows: "Should the dictates of safety and the weather conditions existing make it advisable, the commanding officer of the Shenandoah is authorized to make such modifications in the above itinerary as he deems necessary, remembering, however, that this route will be published in the press and that many will be disappointed should the Shenandoah fail to follow the approved schedule."

31. Before leaving the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, the commanding officer of the Shenandoah obtained and considered in consultation with the aerological officer of the ship the latest weather maps and reports.

33. The 8 P. M. weather reporst were received, mapped and studied by the aerological officer about 11:30 P. M. Sept. 2. The scheduled weather report from Lakehurst for the region being traversed was received about midnight. These reports were discussed by the aerological officer with the executive officer who was on duty in the control car.

34. Between 3 and 3:30 A. M. the commanding officer, executive officer and aerological officer, all of whom were in the control car, observed and discussed the first apparently unfavorable weather conditions. For the next two hours the weather conditions were under constant observation and discussion by the commanding officer and the aerological officer, who were in complete agreement in their conclusions except at one point when the aerological officer advised a change of course to the south. The commanding officer, after consideration and discussion, which developed that the aerological officer based his opinion not on any close or immediate danger but on the unusual movements of storm areas twenty-five to fifty miles to the northward, decided to adhere to the course of 260 degrees true.

OPINIONS.

17. The commanding officer was entirely justified in starting the flight at the time chosen, as the weather maps and reports indicated nothing which would have rendered it unsafe or unadvisable.

18. The weather reports which were received and mapped between 11 P. M. and midnight, Sept. 2, indicated nothing which rendered it unsafe or inadvisable to proceed.

19. A more extensive meterological sevice, which would require more weather stations and more frequent broadcasting of reports, probably would greatly have contributed to the safe navigation of the Shenandoah on this trip.

20. Although subsequent events showed that a change of course to south when suggested by the aerological officer would have been advisable, the commanding officer's decision to maintain his course was a matter for his decision only, was made on his best judgment after discussion and consideration, and was based on the facts and conditions as then known or observed. Any error of judgment involved in this decision was entirely without negligence or blame.

V. The flight from 5:22 A. M. to 5:47 A. M. (Eastern Standard Time).

FACTS.

35. During this period constant watch was kept on aerological conditions by the commanding officer and the aerological officer, but none of the usual cloud formations indicating abnormal air currents in the immediate vicinity of the ship were observed.

36. Prior to arrival at pressure height, all valve covers had been removed.

37. At the beginning of this period the Shenandoah was proceeding on a course 300 degrees true at a height of 1,800 feet, but was making little or no ground speed due to strong adverse winds. The airship at this time had a pressure height of 3,800 feet. At 5:22 A. M. the airship began to rise under the influence of verticle air currents; rose to a height of 3,150 feet in eight minutes; was brought under control and steadied at that level for six minutes; then rose again and more rapidly to 6,100 feet in ten minutes; dropped rapidly to 3,000 feet in three minutes, and finally rose again, sharply up by the nose, to probably 3,700 feet, at which point the ship broke. This last rise was accompanied by a movement of rotation of the whole ship in a horizontal plane and by violent rolling and pitching. During all these movements the ship was out of control. All the above figures are approximate only.

38. The average rate of rise during the first part was 170 feet per minute; during the second part 300 feet per minute, with a probable maximum of 700 feet in the last forty-two seconds. The average rate of fall was 1,000 feet per minute. The rate of the final rise is not ascertainable, but is immaterial, as the ship broke before reaching pressure height.

39. The existence of high velocity vertical air currents without accompanying cloud formations or other visible indications is unusual, but is a phenomenon known to meteorologists.

40. During this period of uncontrolled movements various recognized methods for bringing the ship under control, such as opening the manoeuvring valves for five minutes, nosing down by means of controls, speeding up engines and letting go ballast, were utilized, but without result so far as obtaining full control of the movements of the ship was concerned.

41. The following sequence of events in the final destruction of the ship is indicated by the evidence. At or about the time the ship was at its highest altitude unusual sounds within the body of the ship were heard. These sounds are variously described by different witnesses, but seem clearly to indicate the existence at that time of unusual stresses in some part or parts of the structure. The sharp rise by the nose, the rotation in horizontal plane and the rolling and pitching of the ship during final uncontrolled rise indicate the existence of large unbalanced external aerodynamic forces acting on the ship at that time. The next abnormal event was a cracking of the struts of the control car. The first break in the main structure of the ship occurred between frames 120 and 130, resulting in separating the ship into two parts, the control car remaining attached to the forward section. In something less than a minute thereafter the control car broke loose from the forward section and dropped to the earth. About the same time a second break occurred in the after-section of the ship between frames 100 and 110. The midship action thus broken off, with power cars Nos. 4 and 5 attached thereto, dropped almost directly. The after-section dropped more slowly and was carried by the wind a distance of about one-third of a mile before reaching the earth. The forward section was operated as a free balloon by the personnel left therein and was landed safely about twelve miles from the scene of the disaster.

OPINIONS.

21. During this period the measures taken by the commanding officer to bring the Shenandoah under control were in accordance with the best-established practice.

22. During this period of extreme danger the conduct of all officers and men was deserving of the highest praise. The commanding officer showed skill, courage, and fine qualities of leadership. All other officers and men showed an intimate knowledge of their duties, fine discipline and morale and great courage. The handling of the forward section of the ship as a free balloon by Lieut. Commander Rosendahl and Lieutenant Mayer was particularly deserving of commendation.

23. Although testimony of both operating and scientific experts is to the effect that, subject to certain qualifications, gas pressures sufficient to produce permanent strains or actual damage in the structure probably did not exist at the highest point of rise of the ship, the facts (a) that sounds of a nature indicating unusual stresses in the structure were heard at this time, (b) that the calculations on which expert testimony is based are arrived at through assumptions which are of necessity open to error, and (c) that some of these assumptions for their validity depend upon precision in the action of personnel and material, all taken together justify the opinion that gas pressure due to altitude and rate of rise may well have reached values sufficiently high to produce some damage to structure.

24. The exact nature or extent of this damage is not ascertainable, but was probably not sufficient to have endangered the ship under normal operating conditions.

25. Valve covers having been removed prior to arrival at pressure height, they could not have had any influence on the loss of the ship. Nevertheless, the practice of leaving any valve covers in place at any time after an airship takes the air is considered unsafe and inadvisable.

26. The final destruction of the ship was due primarily to large, unbalanced, external, aerodynamic forces arising from high velocity air currents. Whether the ship, if entirely intact and undamaged, would have broken under the forces existing, or whether prior minor damage due to gas pressure was a determining factor in the final break-up, are matters which this court is unable definitely to determine.

27. The change resulting in a reduction of the number of gas valves was inadvisable. The initiation and urging of this change by the commanding officer of the Shenandoah, the recommendation for its approval by the commanding officer of the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, and its final approval as an experimental installation by direction of the Chief of Bureau of Aeronautics appear, in the light of subsequent events, to have been errors of judgment, but were arrived at after full and careful consideration by the most expert officers of the navy in the operation and design of rigid airships, and do not in any way involve negligence or culpability.

28. Although the disaster to the Shenandoah indicates that a rigid airship can probably be destroyed through external aerodynamic forces only, and that such forces can arise from air currents unaccompanied by visible signs recognizable by aerologists in the present state of knowledge, it is the opinion of the court that such conditions and combinations of circumstance are unusual, and such a conclusion does not, therefore, throw doubt upon the safety and utility of rigid airships to a materially greater degree than does the fact that other types of craft for navigation in the air or on the water are likewise subject to destruction through unusual dangers which cannot invariably be foreseen and provided against.

VI. Loss of life.

FACTS.

42. The following officers and men lost their lives through the destruction of the Shenandoah:

Lieut. Commander Zachary Lansdowne,
Lieut. Commander Lewis Hancock Jr.,
Lieutenant John B. Lawrence,
Lieutenant Arthur B. Houghton,
Lieutenant Edgar W. Sheppard,
Everett P. Allen,
Charles H. Broom,
James W. Cullinan,
Ralph T. Joffray,
Celestino P. Mazzuco,
James Moore Jr.,
Bartholomew O'Sullivan,
George C. Schnitzer,
William H. Spratley.

43. Chief Gunner Raymond Cole received slight injuries and Aviation Chief Rigger John F. McCarthy was seriously injured.

44. Of those lost, eight were in the control car, four in power cars 4 and 5 and two in the body of the ship at the time of the disaster.

45. The control car broke away from the forward section of the ship after the main break in structure and this minor break was probably a direct consequence of the major break. The method of attachment of the control car to the main structure was the same in its general characteristics as that employed on practically all previous rigid airships, i. e., suspension cables for completely supporting its weight, combined with struts only sufficiently strong for steadying the car in flight and designed to collapse before injurious stresses could be transmitted to the main structure in case of contact with the ground when making landings. This general method of support is similar to that employed for the suspension of power cars. Two rigid airships designed and constructed since the Shenandoah embody a new and improved type of control car which is directly attached by structural members to the main frame work of the ship.

OPINIONS.

29. The deaths of all personnel resulting from this accident were due to injuries received in the line of duty and were not the result of their own misconduct.

30. The injuries of all personnel were received in the line of duty and were not the result of their own misconduct.

31. Although the design of the control car and its method of suspension were in accordance with sound and well-established practice at the time of the building of the Shenandoah, the newer design as embodied in the Los Angeles is considered better and safer for future construction.

32. Although it is possible that some lives might have been saved had parachutes been carried and been actually worn by officers and crew at the time of the break-up of the ship, this does not affect or modify the opinion expressed in O-14 above, that the use of the present type of parachute in rigid airships is not advisable. The lesser danger must be accepted to avoid the greater risk.

VII. Loss of and damage to property.

FACTS.

46. The loss of the Shenandoah was complete. Steps for the recovery of salvage value from the wreck have already been taken.

Minor damage was done to private property belonging to three residents in the vicinity of the disaster.

A board was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy immediately after the loss of the ship, which was charged with the duty, among others, of making report in regard to damage to private property.

OPINIONS.

The report of the senior member of that board adequately covers the matter of damage to private property, and the recommendations contained therein are sufficient to permit final decision and further action on the claims arising from this source.

VIII. General.

OPINION.

34. It may be accepted in the case of the loss of any craft at a certain place at a certain time that any change of action on the part of any individual directly or indirectly connected with the movement of such craft might have avoided such loss. In this sense, and in this sense only, can allegations of direct or indirect individual responsibility for the loss of the Shenandoah and the loss of life consequent thereon be supported. Such actions of individuals must be judged on the basis of the facts and established practices known and recognized at that time rather than on conclusions or deductions drawn after the event. Such actions of individuals as in light of subsequent events have been termed "errors of judgment," were, in the opinion of this court, clearly without negligence or culpability. The disaster is part of the price which must inevitably be paid in the development of any new and hazardous art.

35 The court is of the opinion that the recommendations of Professor Hovgaard, technical adviser to the Judge Advocate, in his technical analysis of the evidence, and of Lieut. Commander Rosendahl, senior surviving officer of the Shenandoah, in his summing up of the case on behalf of the survivors, both of which recommendations deal with future development of rigid airships, are worthy of the most careful consideration.

The court is of the opinion that competent technical and operating officers should be detailed to study the great mass of evidence and exhibits forming a part of the proceedings of this court in order to collate it in such form as to be most readily available and useful for future reference in any further development in the arts of construction and operation of rigid airships.

RECOMMENDATION.

That no further proceedings be had in the matter.

OLD WORLD SENDS MESSAGES OF PEACE

BRIAND VOICES GRATITUDE

SHIDEHARA IS FRIENDLY

"One Does Not Fight With One's Best Customer," Says Japanese Minister.

A world-wide note of peace, amity and good-will was struck by New Year's messages of greeting to the American people, which came on New Year's Day through The Associated Press from heads of Governments and Cabinet Ministers of nations in the Orient and the Occident.

Premier Briand of France found time in the midst of governmental difficulties to pen a brief word of cheer. Premier Mussolini of Italy referred to the part played by natives of Italy in the growth of the United States, and his Finance Minister, Count Volpi, expressed gratitude for the reception accorded him on his recent debt funding mission to Washington.

Baron Shidheara, Japanese Foreign Minister, decried talk of a Japanese-American conflict, declaring that "one does not fight one's best customer."

General Primo de Rivera, Premier of Spain, looked for a tightening of the bonds of friendship between his country and America and sounded a note for peace, as did Emile Vandervelde, the Belgian Foreign Minister, who referred to Locarno and America's share in efforts toward disarmament.

From South America came expressions of good-will voiced by Foreign Minister Gallardo of the Argentine and President Serrato of Uruguay, while President Machado of Cuba assured the American people that his countrymen would never forget the debt they owed to "the generous protection of their colossal neighbor."

In the Emerald Isle, Sir James Craig, Premier of Ulster, looked to the new year for "the sunshine of abundant prosperity."

The messages as received by The Associated Press follow:

PREMIER BRIAND OF FRANCE—On the threshold of 1926, I send my best wishes for happiness and prosperity to the great American people, for whom my country preserves a feeling of gratitude which nothing will ever weaken.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI OF ITALY—At the dawn of each year the American people ask themselves, with Walt Whitman in his immortal poem: "Who is he who has progressed the furthest? Because I want to progress further still."

The people of Italy, who are glad and proud of having contributed, with the intelligence and work of their children toward the prosperity and greatness of the starred Republic, raise aloft their best wishes to a friendly nation which is going still further on the road to world civilization.

COUNT VOLPI OF ITALY — The cleared-up relations on the war debt were concluded with equanimity and that transaction illuminates the renewed intimate spiritual communion between Italy asd the United States.

The possibility of future misunderstandings, as one of the most authoritative members of the American Government said, owing to the loyal accord between the two peoples has vanished.

Italy, young, strong and sure of her destiny, is the sincere friend of the United States in Continental Europe, while the starred Republic is the great friend of Italy across the ocean.

I will preserve all my life a most cherished memory of the United States, with a desire to return there in order to know better that people without equal, to whom I send my heartfelt greetings and good wishes for the year just dawning.

BARON SHIDEHARA OF JAPAN—It is with pleasure that I extend to America heartiest felicitations for a Happy New Year and continued prosperity, and for her general good-will toward the peoples of the earth.

America and Japan have been friends for many years. The United States guards one side of the Pacific, while Japan guards the other. Both have made mistakes in dealing with international problems. But our intentions have always been to preserve peace. Our hearts have always been in the right place.

As long as that condition exists, the friendship between America and Japan, the freedom of the Pacific and the altruism of the two powers will sweep aside all difficulties that may present themselves in the future.

Intercommunications between America and Japan are sufficient guarantee of a friendship that has no apparent ending. The Japanese-American trade is so great that the accurate figures seem almost unattainable. America is Japan's best customer. One does not fight with one's best customer.

Such war talk as has been made by irresponsible persons on both sides of the Pacific is most regrettable, principally because so many do not realize the economic and geographic conditions which bind both nations closely together.

So again I wish to express sincerest wishes for a most Happy New Year for America.

CAPT. GEN. DE RIVERA OF SPAIN—I am pleased, through the medium of The Associated Press, to greet mankind in the name of Spain at the beginning of the year 1926 and to extend well wishes, because during this year the peoples may tighten their bonds of fraternity and renew in the world those principles of order without which no peace is possible.

Spain, on her part, will continue the cultural work of fortifying the soul of her citizens so that all her inhabitants may take new interest in the life and prosperity of their fatherland.

I am convinced that peace, order and progress will reign in Spain during the year just born and that at the end of 1926 our people will be more respected and beloved by those who have come to know them and study them.

Greetings to all the peoples, and peace and prosperity to the nations of North, Central and South America.

FOREIGN MINISTER VANDERVELDE of Belgium—The year 1925, from the viewpoint of the relations of my country with the great American nation, has presented exceptional importance. For one thing, the United States will remember that Belgium was first among the nations of Continental Europe to send delegates to Washington to settle the debt problem, and that by the grace of mutual good-will this problem received there a solution with which both peoples have been able to declare themselves satisfied.

For another thing, Belgium knows that the United States, which so generously came in aid of her invaded provinces during the war, is contributing in decisive fashion at the present hour to place her finances and credit on unshakable foundations.

In more general fashion, let me rejoice in the name of my country, which more than any other has had need of security and peace, to note that the American Government will not remain aloof from the great efforts being prepared with a view to the reduction of armaments.

For the first time in history the powers of Western Europe have taken among themselves a solemn engagement not to resort to any attack or invasion against one another, and not in any case to resort to war.

The great and favorable impression which this event caused in America gives me certitude that she will bring her aid to the work of Locarno, thus fortifying in an appreciable measure the guarantees given to Belgium against a return of the unmerited ills from which we so greatly suffered.

Powerful in the war, when her intervention decided the fate of the allied arms, the United States can, in the course of the year now opening, be more powerful still in peace and for the restoration of the world. In that respect, for us, the Belgians, the past is a guarantee of the future.

PREMIER ZANKOFF OF BULGARIA. Today our hearts go out to great America, in the opening of the year 1926. The year 1925 passes into history as a year of failures and distress. We earnestly trust that during 1926 patriotism will touch the soul of our nation deeply and make the new year hopeful and full of achievement.

FOREIGN MINISTER GALLARDO OF ARGENTINA. Upon the commencement of this new year I wish to express my very ardent desire that during its course the cordiality that governs the relations of the peoples of the American nations will be strengthened by an even greater support of the means for peaceful settlement of international questions of which this continent has given an example to the world.

PRESIDENT MACHADO OF CUBA. Cuba never forgets the friendship and gratitude which it owes the American people, and therefore it is a pleasure for me to especially send to the United States and its Government, presided over today by one of its most illustrious citizens, my great friend, the cordial greeting of my people and my Government.

The greatness of that powerful nation, which is the pride of our continent and which has reached the pinnacle among all the countries of the world, is a means of great satisfaction for the Cubans, who have always trusted their political future to the generous protection of their colossal neighbor and now entirely confide their economic well-being, which so intimately depends upon that great metropolis, to the cordial relations maintained between the two countries.

The nobility and gentleness of the Cuban soul are evident proof of the sincerity with which, in the name of my people and in my own, I express my fervent wishes that during the coming year God may continue to shower His blessings upon the United States and their austere and distinguished Chief Executive.

PRESIDENT SERRATO OF URUGUAY—The United States, as a great human democracy, merits the attention of the world. Its civilization is complete, politically, intellectually and economically.

Its marvelous development and the wealth that it commands create for America great moral and historical duties to humanity, which at present is troubled and filled with uncertainties. I do not believe that the country of Washington, Lincoln, Madison, Jefferson and Wilson will fail to heed that clamor for life and love.

With this thought, at the beginning of the new year and in face of the enigma of the future, my best wishes are for the continual progress of the United States and for the fraternity of Americans and the peace of the world.

PRESIDENT CHIARI OF PANAMA—The new year just beginning will without doubt be rich in the ideas of peace, justice and harmony such as are at present receiving serious attention from all humanity. At least it seems certain that those ideas and the moral atmosphere of all America now are ripe for the establishment of a firm basis of understanding and cooperation, and a more ample conception of solidarity and international justice among the different nations of this hemisphere.

A frank reciprocal and loyal understanding which will destroy distrust and prejudice and prepare the way for generous reaction is the best means of attaining these results. The friendship and the affection of peoples can be acquired only when such means are employed, viz., by carrying our hearts in our hands.

For Panamans especially this is a conviction as well as a hope. Sincere admirers of the rare virtues of the North American people, we desire for ourselves the healthy teachings and rich benefits of their greatness and prosperity, to which we have contributed unselfishly and with many sacrifices.

Bound to them by ties of valuable interest, we are confident that their contact will not have the effect of oppressing or annihilating us, but rather that it will be aimed at cooperating and contributing toward the growth and welfare of our nationality at the moving of our forces, at the developing of our resources and as helping us, full of faith, to prepare for the future and make us presentable to the world as a worthy example of the possibilities of the true spirit of Pan-Americanism and the sentiments of equity and justice of the great American democracy.

SIR JAMES CRAIG OF ULSTER—Ulster is triumphing over her difficulties, politically and economically she has weathered the worst of the storm. She is on good terms with all her neighbors and looks forward, full of confidence and hope, for the sunshine of abundant prosperity.

In that hope she says to all her people: "Grow old along with me. The best is yet to be.

HUNDREDS CALL ON SMITH.

Governor Is in Pleasant Mood as He Greets Visitors.

ALBANY, Jan. 1 (AP).—Hundreds of callers, official and unofficial, called at the Executive Mansion this afternoon to pay their respects to Governor Smith and to wish him a happy New Year.

In the receiving line at the reception with the Governor and Mrs. Smith were Adjt. Gen. Edward J. Westcott and Major David Lawyer, the Governor's Military Secretary.

The Governor was in a jovial mood, recalling many events of other days in the official life of the Capitol.

The Governor and Mrs. Smith went to mass early and returned home directly to open and read the hundreds of congratulatory telegrams from State and national admirers.

Tonight the Governor continued to correct the proofs of his annual message to the Legislature, which he will read in person when the 1926 session opens on Wednesday.

DEMANDS RESIDENTIAL CITY.

Mayor Doe Wants Glen Ridge to Bar Business and Apartments.

Special to The New York Times.

GLEN RIDGE, N. J., Jan. 1.—In his annual message delivered at the council rooms here today after having been inducted into office for his second term as Mayor, Charles L. Doe asserted that measures would be taken to preserve Glen Ridge as a residential community. He advocated the barring of all industrial plants, apartment houses and tenements in the borough.

"I believe that the majority of the people in the Borough of Glen Ridge," he said, "are ready to fight and spend their money to keep their community strictly residential."

REGULATION BY COUNCIL

Gold Standard, Fusion of Issue Banks and International Debt Liquidation Held Essential.

PARIS, Jan. 1.—France is beginning to feel her way toward a commercial Locarno with Germany.

Daniel Vincent, the present Minister of Commerce, and Joseph Caillaux, former Finance Minister, both today with this object published in German newspapers articles demonstrating the necessity and profit of the unification of European industrial and commercial interests by reciprocal commercial treaties of a constructive character.

M. Vincent in a Magdeburg newspaper writes:

"A customs union of the great producing peoples of Europe evolving into a confederation of the United States of Europe is doubtless still in the domain of anticipations, but if we are to organize international work and give commercial currents the direction they have followed during the last century we must seek new solutions and evisage all possibilities."

Cooperation Idea Firmly Held.

"The idea of collaboration and cooperation among the European peoples in a joint effort to improve their condition has, M. Vincent thinks, taken firm hold. The increase in the cost of living by the creation of artificial industries through protective tariffs has, he says, had a big effect and brought the different countries of Europe to a realization that they cannot continue to live under the present régime.

It is through operation of the League of Nations that he foresees an extension in the exchange of raw and manufactured materials, under natural unrestricted conditions, which will permit different countries with surplus products to find an outlet and receive economic exchange.

M. Caillaux has in the same sense written an article for the Hamburger Frembenblatt, in which he envisages a commercial union of the "debtor countries of Europe," which will be able at least to hold its own against the gold-backed commerce of the United States. Writing of the effects of the Locarno agreement, M. Caillaux says:

"These political ententes are unfruitful if they are not the prelude to large economic accords, toward the realization of which all statesmen should give their attention if they realize either directly or indirectly an improvement in the relations between nations; for though I am far from being a follower of Karl Marx, I firmly believe he is right in thinking great wars, particularly the recent World War, had for its principal cause economic antagonisms.

Simple treaties of commerce, M. Caillaux thinks, are not now sufficient to meet the economic requirements of European countries.

"What is needed," he writes, "is to bring about an entente between associated industries for the purchase of raw materials, for the marketing of finished products and on price. Such ententes, it goes without saying, must be made under the egis of public powers, guardians of the general interest, but must be negotiated by qualified representatives of the national producers. And we are ready for this.

Economic Councils Already Exist.

"Already economic councils, almost economic parliaments, have been founded in each country and are conferring together at Geneva and elsewhere. It is only one more step, and not a difficult one, to the formation of an inter-European economic council, which will arbitrate difficulties of detail between national producers, effect changes in customs tariffs which the mobility of wealth makes essential and suggest the different allocations of raw materials and markets."

This may be anticipation, says M. Caillaux, using the same word as M. Vincent, but it is anticipation of a few years only if Europe is really determined to get out of her present troubles and get back sound economic life. A great chance, he regrets, was missed in 1919, when the after effects of the war fever prevented a general settlement of war debts and reparations according to the means of each of the combattants. But the chance, M. Caillaux thinks, may come again, though not until there is a general return to the gold standard, "something like a fusion of European banks of emission" and liquidation of international debts, "the generator of the present economic confusion and disorder."

Even in a settlement of these matters, before anything else can be done, M. Caillaux sees need for hardiness, and all the more so because gold, which is the basis of order, has left Europe's shores and is in the possession of the great nation of which more or less all the peoples of Europe are debtors. "But," he asks, "is it not among nations as among individuals—does it not sometimes happen that men who are divided by animosities get together when the force of circumstances makes them a syndicate of debtors? When once bonds of interest are established, does not a syndicate sometimes acquire a singular force which makes the creditor yield and simultaneously unites those who first came together because of their mutual need?"

There is still some way to travel before these anticipations of the two leading experts in French public life on commercial and financial affairs can be realized, but it is significant that on the same day they should independently give voice to these opinions in the German press.

HINDENBURG RECEIVES IN EVENING CLOTHES

He Sends Greetings to All the World After Welcome to Envoys and Officials.

BERLIN, Jan. 1 (AP).—President von Hindenburg officiated at his first New Year's reception in the Executive Mansion today. Standing in the banquet hall, surrounded by his Staff and Government officials, his imposing military figure was easily the most conspicuous among the gold and silver glitter of the gorgeous diplomatic and military uniforms, especially as he and the American Ambassador, Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, alone wore evening clothes.

Although entitled to don his Field Marshal's uniform, the President chose to conform, even in this detail, with the democratic spirit of the Government he represents, but a military atmosphere was created by the presence of officers of the General Staff headed by Major Gen. von Seeckt.

The Diplomatic Corps stood in a semicircle before President von Hindenburg, flanked by Dr. Luther and Gustav Stresemann. The Papal Nuncio, Mgr. Eugenio Decelli, conveyed New Year's greetings in behalf of the Diplomatic Corps, of which he is Dean, saying:

"The Diplomatic Corps begs to extend best wishes and blessings.

"Since the beginning your work in office has been marked by historical events, giving the nations the consoling hope of new and more intimate fellowship. The Diplomatic Corps extends most sincere wishes at the beginning of the year."

President von Hindenburg replied:

"I accept the wishes of the Diplomatic Corps with deep-felt thanks and I hope with you that the wishes and longings of the peoples will be realized. Imbued with truth and humanity, that justice and morality and freedom, which is the foundation on which intercourse between nations must be carried on and developed.

"The German people will continue undauntedly to fortify the national life in the interest of peace, hoping that the New Year may bring realization of our wishes. I extend to you gentlemen, your heads of State and your nations, in the name of the German people, the heartiest New Year's greetings.

Most of the Envoys present and others were impressed with the buoyancy and alertness shown by the President. His animated conversation with Ambassador Schurman was generally remarked upon.

FLARES ON PIKE'S PEAK.

They Usher in the New Year, Having Been Set Off by Hardy Climbers.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., Jan. 1 (AP).—Huge flares flamed at the summit of Pike's Peak as midnight ushered in a new quarter of a century. Street lights in Colorado Springs were extinguished and thousands watched the brilliant, varicolored lights on the summit, fourteen miles away.

The display, the third to be staged at the peak by the Adaman Club, was visible for many miles in the clear air. It equaled 450,000 candlepower.

The seven members of the club battled over the snowy wastes to the peak to light the flares, which had been left at the summit house by the cog train on its last trip of the season.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—King George in a message today to the Lord Mayor of London acknowledging his New Year's greetings said:

"I join with you in the fervent hope that by the blessing of God and with increased good-will and better understanding at home and abroad 1926 may be the dawn of a new era of peace and happiness among the nations of the world."

COOLIDGES GREET NEW YEAR THRONG

1847, the Associated Veterans of the War of 1846-47, the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, the Grand Army of the Republic, the Medal of Honor Legion, the Union Veteran Legion, the Union Veterans' Union, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Society of the Army of Santiago, the Spanish War Veterans, the American Legion, the Army and Navy Union, the Minute Men, the Society of Colonial Wars, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Sons of the Revolution and the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia.

Finally came the long line of citizens who were made just as welcome as those who had preceded them.

The diplomats hurried away to change their uniforms and prepare for the benefit which Secretary and Mrs. Kellogg gave in the Pan-American Building.

There were several absentees in the Cabinet group. The Attorney General and the Secretary of Commerce were unaccompanied by their wives, both of whom are absent from the city, while neither the Secretary of Labor nor Mrs. James J. Davis was able to be present.

As the ladies of the Cabinet no longer stand in line to welcome the visitors, few of the latter realized that the young woman in black velvet and silver lace in the Blue Room party was the wife of the new Secretary of War or that another attractive figure in black and gold was Mrs. Jardine, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who came early, held court in the Blue Room for fifteen or twenty minutes, but joined her husband when the Speaker appeared with the members of the House of Representatives.

The Congressional delegation was small, with Senators Borah, Couzens and Shortridge conspicuous in the group from the upper house. But there was an unusually large body of officers from each branch of the military service.

The unlisted visitors included almost as many women as men, many of the former being in modish street suits or smart fur coats. Several soldiers in khaki, one speaking Spanish and accompanied by several relatives and introducing themselves as Filipinos, were received with great cordiality by the President and Mrs. Coolidge.

Mrs. Coolidge in Gold Lace Gown.

Mrs. Coolidge, who appeared just as animated at 2 P. M. as at 11 A. M., wore a gown of gold lace with long, straight tunic and plain skirt, the latter ten inches off the ground. The neck was rounded slightly in front and the sleeves were long and close fitting.

The President and his wife were unassisted in receiving, though the diplomats are usually presented by the Secretary of State, with his wife standing beside the hostess.

Secretary and Mrs. Kellogg followed the President and Mrs. Coolidge in the short procession from the stairs to the receiving line, but took no part in the reception. They left early to take their place as hosts at the Pan American Union.

Mrs. Kellogg wore a gown of taupe chiffon, with self-colored embroidery emphasizing the straight lines of the long tunic. Her small hat was of satin in the same shade.

Mrs. Longworth wore a black cloth skirt on modish lines with blouse of silk and metal brocade, a small black hat and low-heeled black shoes with straps across the instep. Her hosiery and gloves were a fashionable tan shade and her outer wrap a broad and long scarf of pointed fox.

New Year's calls had a revival today when the Chief Justice and Mrs. Taft were hosts to several hundred callers with the Associate Justices of the court and their wives assisting.

The Secretary of the Treasury and his young daughter also held an afternoon reception, for which no cards were issued. A party of maids and matrons of an art society assisted.

The new Secretary of War and Mrs. Dwight Davis, who took their place as Cabinet hosts for the first time, had many visitors at their new home, 1,52 Twentieth Street. Mme. Wallenberg, wife of the Minister from Sweden, assisted.

The Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Wilbur were at home from 3 until 6 o'clock.

Mrs. Hoover and Mrs. Sargent being out of the city, there was no reception at their homes, but Mrs. Jardine had a reception at the Mayflower, where she and Secretary Jardine are living for the season.

FRENCH CONSULATE ENTERTAINS FRIENDS

SYRIAN MANDATE PRAISED

American Organizations Interested in France Represented at New Year's Reception.

A reception to members of the French colony of this city and to representatives of organizations inetrested in French affairs was held yesterday in the offices of the French Consulate, 9 East Fortieth Street. Maxime Mongendre, the Consul General, in his address of welcome paid a tribute to the devotion of France in maintaining her ideals and expressed confidence that the coming year would see her on the way to financial and economic rehabilitation.

"Let us hope," said M. Mongendre, "that the coming year will bring to our dear country, so sorely and unjustly tried, relief from a financial situation which she is resolved to restore to complete stability.

"Whatever trials France still has to sugmount, she has full confidence in her destiny. By her courage, her prudence, her thrift and her labor, by the nobility of her ideals, she remains a nation which commands the respect and affection of the world. Despite the bitterness which the cruel deceptions of the peace have have left us, it nevertheless cannot be said that our brave soldiers have been sacrificed in vain."

The Christian population of Syria and Lebanon is friendly to France and desires a continuation of the French mandate, declared Dr. N. Barbour, Syrian physician, one of the other speakers. "All the recent events prove that the Christians are the sincere friends of France," he declared, "and it has been likewise shown that France appreciates their fidelity anad loyalty. What the Christian population of Syria and Lebanon asks of France is that she continue to protect them and defend their rights against the ignorant fanatics, who, deceived by the kindness of the French and encouraged by certain foreign influences, have encroached on these rights and committed horrible crimes."

Augustin Cougnenc, President of the Federation of French War Veterans, replied to the greeting of the Consul General on behalf of the French colony of New York. Among the seventy-five guests were Guy Envin, French poet, blinded in the war; Joseph Perret, Julien Champenois, Roger Drouin, former director of the French Bureau of Information; Captain Bruygue of the French Line, Felix Weil, Secretary General of the Alliance Française; John C. Flanagan, Vice President of the same organization; Dr. De Bon and Firman Guégo, editor of the Courrier des Etats Unis.

$4 HORSE WINS $26,000.

BERLIN, Jan. 1 (AP).—Poor Fool, a fourteen-year-old nag which was sold several years ago as a cripple for $4, has won $26,000 in steeplechase purses during the past two seasons.

The animal fractured a leg in the Grand Leipsic Steeplechase in 1923 and was ordered to be shot. Albert Keith, his English trainer, did not have the heart to execute his charge, so he bought him for $4 and nursed him back to health and vigor.

The horse, which previously had had a long string of victories to his credit, was put in a sling and his fractured leg in splints, and after many days was able to stand again and finally to sport silks and go over the jumps. Poor Fool since his recovery led his fields home in the Grunewald and Karlshorst steeplechases, which are rated among the classics of the German turf.

SAYS MAN WAS HERE IN THE GLACIER AGE

BONES IN THE SOUTHWEST

GUARDING OF TULES URGED

Science Association Is Informed That Tribe Has a High Civilization Untainted Since Columbus.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 1.—Abundant evidence has now been gathered in the Southwest, in California and in Mexico to establish the existence of men in the country during the age of glaciers in association with mammoths, mastodons and other extinct animals, according to Dr. Byron Cummings, Professor of Archaeology of the University of Arizona, who spoke today at a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The general acceptance of proof of the existence of ancient men in America has been delayed, according to Dr. Cummings, by the attitude of a few anthropologists of great note who prematurely committed themselves to the opinion that the first dwellers in America came only a few thousand years ago and have been defending their position by denouncing men who tell of the discoveries of pleistocene, or ice age, human remains and relics.

The controversy between the anthropologists who hold that the first Americans immigrated here 7,000 or 8,000 years ago and those who hold that men were on this continent twenty, thirty or fifty thousand years ago, has been smoldering for years, but has reached an acute stage recently over the meaning of human bones and relics found in association with mammoth bones in Florida and elsewhere.

The conservative school, which regards the American aborigines as late immigrants from Asia, have insisted that the human bones and relics in question belong to comparatively recent times, but by digging operations, or the action of streams, or by some other cause, have become mixed with the bones of extinct animals of an earlier time. It is recognized, according to Dr. Cummings, that the American who finds ancient human remains on this continent will become the target for withering criticism from a group of men of great eminence among anthropologists.

Says Ridicule Retarded Work.

"Full investigation and carefull tabulation of results," he said, "have too often been retarded by the storm of ridicule and abuse that has been heaped upon the heads of those who brought to light anything unusual. Some of our leading anthropoligists have condemned without a hearing facts that are really incontrovertible, and good men have been hounded from the profession by others who happened to hold the centre of the stage at the time.

"A few years ago some United States geologists were making investigations in Southern Arizona. One of them was kind enough to address the Faculty and students of the University of Arizona on some skeletal remains of the mammoth that had been found in our country. I suggested to the speaker that it would be fine if he and his associates would continue their investigations in this old lake bed until they uncovered some fossil remains of man. The answer came back quick and straight—'Not on your life; if we find any human bones in these fossil beds, we'll bury them instanter, pack our luggage and ask to be transferred to some other locality. We are not going to risk our professional reputation by finding any pleistocene man.'

"It seems a crime to some to bring to light anything new in a thing that contradicts our published theories.

"Men uncover the bones of pleistocene animals in California, Arizona and many other places, and the finds are accepted without question; but if a human bone or implement is encountered in the same or similar strata, their presence must be accounted for in some other way.

"Primitive crania are found in the ancient caves of the arid plateau of our Southwest. and in Mexico thirty feet below the surface, buried eighteen feet beneath an ancient lava flow; but the chins of these crania do not accord in form and line with the neanderthal type of Europe and, therefore, cannot be primitive. It matters not that the ruins of a different and yet prehistoric people lie above them and the dust of ages enveloped them. It matters not that eighteen feet of gradual deposit, twenty feet of lava and two feet of surface soil lie above them. They do not conform and therefore cannot be right.

"In fact, to conform seems to be becoming an educational as well as ecclesiastical requirement in our national life. Unless we travel in the grooves made for us by our self-appointed superiors, we must get off the highway. We have no place either on or behind the band wagon. We must follow the crowd and become a rooter or the manager of the show will publish us to the alumni and brand us as traitors."

Warns of Publicity Temptations.

Asserting that the great public interest in archaeology was tempting some scientists to make rash and premature claims and causing certain men to attempt to misappropriate the scientific results of others, Professor Cummings continued:

"The great publicity given recently to the exploiting of Tut-ankh-Amen's tomb in Egypt and the rifling of the dinosaur nests in the Gobi Desert have awakened a general popular interest in archaeological investigation to such an extent that nearly everybody in our part of the country is hunting for a buried city, a lost mine or a hidden treasure.

"To capitalize this awakened interest and secure therefrom results that shall be permanent and worth while, is the task of the biologists and anthropologists of today. But to meet the popular demand for sensation and to avoid wasting precious time, energy and money, is no easy accomplishment in these days of Sunday sheets and sensational scientific exaggeration. Research workers are in great danger of giving this popular demand for something striking, something unusual, too much heed. It is a great temptation to shake one's own plumage and cluck, instead of sitting on the nest until the eggs are hatched, and we may be able to determine with some degree of accuracy the character of the offspring.

"If we would dignify our profession and make permanent results the great goal to be obtained, we cannot afford to fan the sensational flame. The modern craze for advertising is making us forget professional ethics and personal justice. A short time ago an investigator sent some rubbings of a few Hebrew inscriptions found on some lead crosses and swords near Tuscon to a celebrated Hebrew scholar in one of our large educational institutions and asked for an interpretation of their significance. He received a courteous letter in reply stating that he could translate nearly all of the inscriptions and requesting that full information regarding the articles and the full texts of all Latin inscriptions and other symbols be sent him, and that he be permitted to prepare a paper for some scientific society on the finds, but the letter contained no translation of the Hebrew symbols.

"A few years ago an archaeological worker spent an entire Summer of great hardship in a remote region of Northern Arizona and was fortunate enough to find several large cliff pueblos before unknown. A brief account appeared in the local papers. Forthwith an official archaeologist made a hurried trip to the region, spent two days among the ruins and in an unusually short time a hurried bulletin of the department at Washington appeared as a preliminary report on the remarkable ruins of the hitherto unexplored region with no acknowledgment of the locally published facts. The results of a hard Summer's work had been forestalled."

Asks Protection of the Tules.

The council of the association adopted a resolution urging the State Department to make suitable representations to the Republic of Panama for the protection of the Tule Indians, the race among whom the so-called "White Indians" of Panama occur. The aggressions of other tribes and of negroes are said to be threatening the extermination of the Tules.

The Tules are descendants of the Mayas and are said to have a higher culture than that of any other primitive people in the world today. A memorandum submitted to the council on the subject said:

"The Tule people, estimated to number 40,000, are living today amid the same surroundings and practically under the same conditions as existed when Columbus found the New World, as yet but little influenced by the advent of the white or negroid races. The Tule people in many ways bear evidence of being the last remnant of a very ancient and highly developed culture, with a highly developed political and social system, a language apparently fundamentally different from that of other known indigenous American languages and a form of hieratic ideographic writing apparently superior to any other known surviving indigenous American writing. Among these Tule people are a large number, variously estimated at from 400 to 2,000 of the so-called white Indians, or partial albinos, which present hitherto unprecedented interest in biological, anthropological and perhaps ethnological lines."

After reviewing the map-making activities of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, of which he is the head, Colonel E. Lester Jones said:

"There is another form of map which is scarcely in existence as yet, but is going to be more and more important as time goes on. This is the earthquake map.

"During the past year the earthquake problem, which is always with us, has taken on a new significance. It has been brought home that earthquakes can occur anywhere in the United States, since they were felt in twenty-two States during the first nine months of 1925, not including some in which the St. Lawrence earthquake of February was felt. There were earthquakes in three different regions in Canada, in several parts of Alaska and in parts of Mexico adjacent to the United States during the same period. The St. Lawrence earthquake was felt strongly in New England and New York, and the Montana and Santa Barbara earthquakes were severe enough to call attention to the fact that cities in earthquake regions which are not built to stand earthquakes are in a dangerous condition. The fate of the cities of Tokio and Yokohama is too recent to be forgotten.

"Some of the utilities which, as I have stated, are facilitated by topographic maps, are jeopardized by earthquakes. These dangers are now being recognized and much effort is being put into the designing of buildings and all types of structures to resist earthquakes. It is true that these should be well built everywhere whether there is earthquake danger or not, but at the present time this is scarcely practicable; nor is it possible to tear down old, weak buildings except in the case of real danger. It is important, then, to know where special precautions should be taken.

"If accurate earthquake prediction, both as to time and place, were now possible we should know exactly what to do. But it must be admitted that in spite of many predictions we know very little as to just where and when earthquakes are likely to occur. We should, then, for the present, be content with determining accurately the areas where earthquakes have occurred and mapping them so as to indicate the intensity. Such maps would bring out clearly the evidence available from the past as to the need for special precautions, and by keeping them revised new regions of activity would be adequately mapped."

MYSTERY IN SHOOTING OF MAN IN STREET

Friends Find Victim on Sidewalk With Two Wounds—Tenants Say They Heard Five Shots.

Frank McPartland, 26 years old, of 504 West Twenty-eighth Street, was carried into the French Hospital, in West Thirty-fourth Street, near Tenth Avenue, shortly before last midnight with a bullet wound in the left side and another in the left shoulder. Patrolman Goodshaw, who was sent to the hospital from the West Thirtieth Street Station, was told by Thomas Kane of 430 West Thirtieth Street and George Howard of 1,835 Patterson Avenue, the Bronx, that they found McPartland, whom they knew, lying on the sidewalk in front of 500 West Twenty-eighth Street and took him to the hospital.

Detectives were told at that address that five shots were heard by the tenants and they thought they had been fired at McPartland on the sidewalk. McPartland said he did not know who shot him. He was removed to Bellevue Hospital. Kane and Howard said they did not see McPartland's assailant.

Michael Furey, 78 years old, for fifty years an employe in the City Clerk's office in Jersey City and who for more than half of that period had made it a practice to personally extend greetings to the Mayor of Jersey City on New Year's Day, was probably fatally injured yesterday forenoon when he fell under a bus in front of the City Hall in Jersey City.

Mr. Furey had left his home at 47 Duncan Street to call on his old friend, Mayor Frank Hague. As he was alighting from a bus he slipped, and, in an effort to save himself from a heavy fall, rolled under the wheel as the vehicle started. City officials carried Mr. Furey into the City Hall. An ambulance was summoned from the City Hospital, and word of the accident conveyed to the victim's son, Dr. A. P. Furey, a physician.

John Schneckenberg, 82 years old, of Rochelle Park, N. J., a brother of Justice Henry Schneckenberg, died yesterday morning in the Hackensack Hospital of injuries he received shortly after 2 A. M. when he was struck by an unidentified automobile in Essex Road, near his home.

FINDS MONEY DESIRE RUINS NEWSPAPERS

ASSAILS SYNDICATE SYSTEM

Believes It Wrecks Individuality and Shuts Door on Talent—Calls Editorials Weak.

A passion for money making to the exclusion of the higher ideals of journalism is ruining newspapers, in the opinion of Don C. Seitz, who recently resigned from The World to become an associate editor and member of the Board of Directors of The Outlook. His article expressing this view is printed in the current issue of the latter publication and is the first of a series on "The American Press." It has the subtitle, "The Palladium of Our Liberties: Is It Cracked?"

The old vigilantes of newspaper life, Mr. Seitz says, were watchdogs engaged in an economically hazardous occupation, but for this very reason they fought with savage zeal for what they believed.

"Purse and person have become plump in the profession to a degree unimagined so late as a decade ago," he writes. "The self-constituted Palladium is groggy and there are cracks in its pedestal. One of the many discoveries that came with the wartime inflation was that profit-making could be made the rule and not the exception in journalism."

English Papers Profitable.

This discovery was first made in London by Harmsworth, he says, and most of the English newspapers have become profitable, but of no public use.

"We have not reached this stage in America, but seem to be on the way," he continues. "Traditional newspaper poverty has kept the public out of the newspaper field. Frank A. Munsey once floated a bond issue covering his magazines, but none is outstanding. Bernarr Macfadden, of physical culture fame, advertised a stock issue a year ago to float his Evening Graphic. The rush to subscribe did not upset Wall Street. William R. Hearst recently mortgaged a batch of his publications to the amount of $12,000,000 in bonds, but how far the citizenry invested is not revealed. Readers of Arthur Brisbane's "Today" column get the impression that he bought most of them out of his salary as editor of The Evening Journal. Mr. Hearst is, however, something of a syndicate himself, owning twenty-six daily newspapers and a half-score of magazines. He will be in a good position to capitalize as soon as he can secure a chartered accountant's certificate that he is making money—which is the British method of pocket-picking.

"Beyond this, American newspapers are the properties of individuals, estates, partnerships and close corporations. Few are longer owned by their editors. The work is done by hired men, some of whom are paid nearly as well as the union compositors, though working under a less certain tenure of employment and a more shifting scale.

"Wages have more than doubled in mechanical departments, but have enjoyed little hoisting in the brainery, save to those favored beings who can have their output syndicated. These pets of the press are egregiously overpaid, but cost their employers nothing.

"This system of syndicating is a large factor in destroying individuality in our newspapers, besides shutting the door of opportunity in the face of talent. It adds to the number of mute, inglorious Miltons and suppressed Hampdens of the countryside. Few realize the enormous extent upon which the press in general relies upon canned goods for filling. Numerous syndicates exist profitably through the supply of features, and all large dailies maintain syndicate departments. The sale of their by-products runs up to a pretty penny, permitting, as already noted, the payment of large salaries to specialists, comic artists and even poets. The incomes of Edgar A. Guest and Walt Mason, for example, would make Tennyson and Longfellow feel like pikers."

Sees Lack of Noted Editors.

The outstanding editorial figures of the past have not been succeeded by others of their type, Mr. Seitz says, and he asks whether this is due to lack of intelligence in the communities or the editors.

"The fault, perhaps, lies with both," he goes on. "We recall the Athenian jester who held up a dried fish by the tail and so caused an audience to turn away from the oratory of Anaximines. 'See,' he cried in triumph, 'a dried fish is more interesting than Anaxmines.' To meet dried-fish competition editors have been swept off their feet and have followed the false gods to their own moral destruction. Their business managers are of the sort who are able to only sell circulation and not results. The buying power of the mass has become the fetish of the advertiser, and not the buying power of the individual. Yet where will you find two more successful newspapers than THE NEW YORK TIMES or The Boston Transcript, both of which have sturdily refused to be swept from off their feet?

"The ready apology for this sort of recalcitrance is that 'people are no longer influenced by editorials,' which is not true. The editorials are no longer influential because they have no force behind them, no potential purpose, no punch. The study is how to mix milk and water rather than blood and iron. The greater a newspaper's circulation, the weaker its editorial policy is certain to be, perhaps on the theory that there are just so many more people whose feelings must not be injured. The management seems deliberately to strive in a colorless indirection, instead of glorying in its strength."

"The newspapers have come to be more a convenience than an influence, as a result of the various forces," says Mr. Seitz. He also criticizes the haste with which news is rushed into the papers, which he says brings about bad writing and misinformation.

MAN SLAIN IN EMPTY FLAT.

No Clue to Slayer, but Neighbor With Two Pistols Is Arrested.

An unidentified man about 40 years old was found shot to death yesterday morning in an unoccupied apartment in a rear tenement at 220 Cherry Street.

After questioning tenants of the house, detectives of the Clinton Street Station arrested Nunzio Rapatto, in whose rooms, they said, they found two loaded pistols for which he had no license. He was booked on a charge of violation of the Sullivan law, but according to the detectives was not suspected of any complicity in the shooting. They found no clue to the slayer, they said.

ASK GIDDINGS TO HEAD CRIME PRIZE BOARD

Society Wants Him to Replace Wickersham as Judge of Plans to Cut Lawlessness.

Former United States Attorney General George W. Wickersham has resigned the Chairmanship of the Board of Judges which will make the $3,000 award offered by the Society for the Prevention of Crime for the best plan to reduce lawlessness in New York City. Professor Franklin H. Giddings of the Department of Sociology of Columbia University has been asked to fill the vacancy. These announcements were made yesterday at the offices of the society, 1,819 Broadway.

"Although the award is offered for a plan dealing specifically with New York," reads a statement issued by the society, "manuscripts have come from Australia, Saskatchewan, Canada; France, Italy, and other countries. Under the rules, only citizens of the United States can compete.

"More than 1,200 persons have written about the contest and about 300 manuscripts have been received in proper form. The contest will close Monday, Jan. 11.

Kills 2, Wounds 2 of Her Children.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Jan. 1 (AP).—Mrs. Ruth Townsley shot and killed two of her children, inflicted probably fatal injuries on two others and then turned the gun on herself at her home here today. She is expected to recover. The children killed were Katherine, 8 months old, and Clifford, 3 years old. Dorothy, 5, and Margaret, 7, were wounded. Frank Townsley, husband and father, was at work at the time.

Spectacular Fire in Greenpoint.

The Greenpoint section of Brooklyn was lighted early yesterday by the glare from flames that destroyed a wing of the factory of the Tannin Corporation, makers of tanning extracts, which has a uniform height of five stories and a block frontage on Greene Street, West Street, and Freeman Street. The interior of the Freeman Street wing was destroyed. The flames could be seen from Williamsburg Bridge and from parts of Long Island City and Manhattan. The cause of the fire was not established and an accurate estimate of damage was not obtainable.

Another Year of Leadership

The volume of advertising—28,200,444 agate lines—sets a new high record for New York City, exceeding the total of 1924 by 1,916,520 lines. The margin by which The Times led the second newspaper—10,963,382 lines—also set a new record.

More significant than the unprecedented volume of advertising was its character. Advertisements offered for publication in The New York Times are subject to censorship, and false, misleading or questionable announcements are not accepted. Thousands of lines of advertisements were omitted because they did not conform to The Times standards and its ideals of a newspaper's obligations to the public.

The average daily and Sunday circulation of The New York Times in 1925 was over 385,000—greater than any other morning newspaper of standard size in New York. The average net paid sale for 1925 of the daily edition was more than 360,000 and of the Sunday edition in excess of 600,000. This is the largest group of intelligent, thinking men and women ever gathered together as readers by any newspaper. The New York Times appeals only to those of that character, and its circulation therefore is of the highest quality.

RESTAURANT BARS NEGRO DELEGATE

GO TO NEGRO CAFETERIAS

Conference Ends With Resolutions Favoring American Entry Into League and Court.

Special to The New York Times.

EVANSTON, Ill., Jan. 1.—The final day of the Interdenominational Students Conference was given over by the 900 students representing twenty denominations and 176 colleges in the United States and Canada to summaries, discussions and the adoption of resolutions and reports, the fruits of the four-day session.

During the discussion of the report of the Findings Committee on the Church and its attitude to racial discrimination, it was learned that a negro delegate, C. G. Blooah, a Liberian graduate student at the University of Chicago, had been barred from a delegation dinner at a restaurant in Evanston near the church where the conference is meeting.

Mr. Blooah had been invited by Treadwell Smith of the Union Seminary delegation to meet others in the delegation at dinner. The Liberian told Mr. Smith that his admittance already had been refused at the restaurant where the dinner was to be held. Mr. Smith then went to the manager, while thirty students waited at the door, to ask him for permission to seat Mr. Blooah, and the manager refused, saying that guests in the dining room would not stand for it.

Several of the students proposed that the delegation and its guests boycott the restaurant. It was finally decided, however, to go on with the dinner. Mr. Smith, Mr. Blooah and several others did not attend.

"Instead," Mr. Smith said, "we walked across town to a nice negro restaurant, where we had a good dinner and an interesting discussion on racial and international relations."

Boycott Plan Is Rejected.

After hearing this, it was proposed that the Conference as a whole boycott the restaurants near the church. This proposal was turned down. At noon several hundred of the students walked across town and took their luncheon in negro restaurants, while others persuaded negroes to accompany them to one of the cafeterias named in the boycott proposal. On this occasion the negroes were received.

It was said during the discussion that the question of negro eating places at several Northern universities was a real problem for the students. Negro students at Columbia and Union Seminary in New York, a delegate declared, had to go half an hour's walk from their lectures to find restaurants that would receive them, because Amsterdam Avenue and Broadway cafeterias would not admit them.

The conference adopted and approved a report calling for the abolition of military training in church and denominational schools, and other colleges and universities, including the immediate abolition of compulsory military training in land grant institutions such as the State university.

During the discussion of this report 181 students placed themselves on record with a promise that they would refuse to participate in any manner in any future war. Sixty-five said that they could not declare now that they would refuse service in war and 215 said that they were unable to decide on their stand. Several hundred refrained from recording themselves.

Reports on industrial relations advocating the laboratory method for church members in learning about industrial problems and a free pulpit in the expression of opinion on labor matters were approved. During the afternoon several college fraternity members attacked the Greek letter college society system as undemocratic and unchristian.

Following the discussion of war and militarism the conference voted to support entrance into the World Court and the League of Nations by the United States and to send copies of the resolution to Congress and the President.

The conference adopted a resolution calling for a modified eugenics program in America, recommending the legalizing of the dissemination of information on birth control and the progressive elimination through segregation and sterilization of those who are by heredity mentally defective.

Another resolution declared:

"We believe that industry organized on a competitive basis for profit is prolific cause of war, class hatred, poverty, crime and other social and economic evils."

A resolution calling for the approval of the Dyer anti-lynching bill was adopted.

Theological Schools Attacked.

In discussions of the church and education, George E. McCracken of Princeton said that religious education in the colleges was a travesty, that it was neither religious nor educational. He declared further that the scientific principle in research in colleges was impossible today, that pressure was brought to bear on every teacher by vested interests from which the colleges draw their support that made free inquiry impossible.

Asserting that it was impossible to get information on religious education at Princeton, Dr. McCracken proposed, as a step toward free inquiry, the abolition of theological seminaries and the substitution for them of the education of religious workers in secular institutions.

Gordon Bigelow of Union Theological Seminary, in submitting the report of the commission studying the racial, war and industrial problems, named the Klan, American Defense Society and National Security League as organizations that obstructed a solution of the racial and war prevention problems.

"The Klan," he said, "has gathered under its medieval trappings most of the morons, is peculiarly antagonistic to the religion of Jesus, and is a menace not only to America but to the entire world."

A delegation from Hamlin University, St. Paul, charged that by its attitude toward birth control the Church was encouraging the reproduction of the unfit and was evading the question because it was afraid. The conference approved a motion, which was referred to the Findings Committee, to withdraw a part of the support now being given to foreign missions and voted it toward stopping this source of "polluting the country with the mentally and physically unfit."

The conference approved a motion suggesting the formation of a committee for the purpose of working out a plan for the unification of three great Protestant young people's organizations. The Christian Endeavor Society, the Epworth League and the Baptist Young People's Union. Another plan was approved for joining up these various Christian organizations in a definite cooperative scheme with the Federal Council of Churches.

A continuation committee of twenty-five was appointed to carry out a national program looking toward the uniting of young people's societies as the first step in bringing about one united Protestant Church.

CLERGY VISIT BISHOP DUNN.

Wish Him a Happy New Year, Then Call on Mgr. Lavelle.

The Right Rev. John J. Dunn, Auxiliary Bishop of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York, was "at home" yesterday afternoon and last evening to the clergy, and a large percentage of the 1,272 priests in the archdiocese called on him and wished him a "happy New Year" at the rectory of the Church of the Annunciation, Convent Avenue and 131st Street, of which he is the irremovable rector.

Ordinarily the clergy would have gone first to wish Cardinal Hayes a "happy New Year," but his Eminence is in Rome, and his home, 452 Madison Avenue, is closed.

After paying their respects to Bishop Dunn the priests came down town and called on Mgr. Michael J. Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral for the last forty-seven years and senior consultor of the archdiocese. Many cautioned Mgr. Lavelle not to work as hard as he has been working, so that he will be here to observe his golden jubilee in the priesthood, all of which has been passed at the cathedral.

DUANE METHODISTS TO OPEN NEW CHAPEL

LUTHERANS MEET JAN. 26

Will Vote at Albany on Proposed Merger of Synod With the Ministerium.

The Duane Methodist congregation, of which the Rev. Dr. Arthur Jamieson is pastor, will open the chapel which it has erected at 574 Broome Street tomorrow at 3 P. M. Bishop Luther B. Wilson will preach. The church is two blocks from the Canal Street subway station. Invitations have been issued for a dinner next Thursday at the church in celebration of the opening.

The congregation hopes then to expand the work for young business women and provide a home for them. In the old church the parlors were open daily for girls to pass their luncheon hour. The new chapel will be open daily for rest and prayer.

Dr. Jamieson said yesterday: "While 'down and outers' will not be excluded, the plan is rather to centre attention on our young American people, who are really carrying the burdens of our great industrial centres."

The Right Rev. John Gardner Murray, Bishop of Maryland, who became Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church yesterday, will appear in his n capacity on Monday at the Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue.

The Lutheran Synod of New York will hold a special meeting in the First Lutheran Church at Albany Jan. 26 to vote on the proposed merger of the synod with the New England and New York Lutheran Ministerium, to prevent the overlapping of the work of the three bodies in the same district. The Synod of New York and New England has voted unanimously to merge.

The Rev. Amos J. Traver, Secretary of the Lutheran Synod of New York, has resigned as pastor of St. Thomas's Lutheran Church, the Bronx, in order to accept the office of General Secretary of the Luther League of America. His headquarters will be in Philadelphia.

Members of the Women's Division of the Committee for Completing the Cathedral of St. John the Divine will hold a luncheon at the Town Hall Club, 123 West Forty-third Street, next Tuesday at 1 o'clock. Mrs. Vincent Astor, Chairman will preside.

Invitations have been issued by a committee of which the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman is Chairman for a dinner next Thursday at the Union League Club in honor of the editors of the American Institute of Christianity. The editors are engaged in compiling a twelve volume work which proposes to cover the whole range of Christian history and activity. More than 1,000 scholars have engaged to write the 20,000 articles which will make up the encyclopedia. Forty counselors representing all the larger Protestant denominations are cooperating.

Ward Cheney of Cheney Brothers, silk manufacturers, has been elected a trustee of Canton Christian College, Canton, China, the local offices of which are at 18 East Forty-first Street.

The First Lutheran Church at Pearl River, N. J., will celebrate its silver jubilee tomorrow. The anniversary sermon will be preached by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Trexler, President of the Lutheran Synod of New York and New England. Presiding will be the Rev. Henry Charles Egner, the pastor.

From now on Holy Communion will be celebrated in the French language every Sunday at 8:45 A. M. in the chapel of St. Martin of Tours, this being one of the seven "Chapels of the Tongues" at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

A new pulpit gown of heavy black silk with black velvet stripes on the sleeves was a Christmas gift to the Rev. Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, at Sixty-fourth Street. Seven women of his congregation made the gift. He wore it last Sunday when he dedicated the Rockefeller memorial carillon.

The name of The Universalist Leader, a weekly journal which is the official organ of the Universalist Church, has been changed to The Christian Leader, which was the original name of the paper when it was founded in 1819. "The word 'universalist' is a great word when properly understood—but it is not as great as the name Christian," said Dr. John Van Schaick Jr. of Boston and Washington, editor, in explaining the change.

The United Lutheran Church in America, the headquarters of which are at 437 Fifth Avenue, will shortly inaugurate home mission work among the Southern negroes of the Georgia Lutheran Ministerium acts favorably on the proposal at its convention in Lakewood, Fla., next month.

The Paddock Lectures for 1925-1926 will be delivered Monday, Wednesday and Friday of this and next week at 6 o'clock in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd of the General Episcopal Theological Seminary, Chelsea Square. The lecturer will be the Rev. # BIG ADVANCE SEEN IN CARE OF INSANE

Modern Science Leads to a Reduction in Mental Disorders, Committee Reports.

INCREASE IN RECOVERIES

More Numerous Admissions to the Hospitals Laid to Decreasing Reluctance of Patients.

Modern psychology and medical science forecast great advances in the prevention and reduction of insanity, and have already caused considerable improvement, according to a report made public yesterday by the National Committee for Mental Hygiene. The report appears in full in Mental Hygiene, quarterly journal of the Committee. It is based on the first comprehensive study ever made by the Federal Census Bureau of the prevalence of mental and nervous diseases in the United States. It includes returns from 526 public and private institutions for mental diseases in forty-seven States.

The report shows that on Jan. 3, 1923, there were 267,617 mental patients in these institutions, and 22,839 on parole. From Jan. 1, 1922, to Jan. 1, 1923, 73,063 were admitted, 52,777 were discharged, and 25,656 died. The general rate of recovery and improvement among the discharged patients was 40.6 per 100 admissions. Of those discharged, 23 per cent. were recovered, 46 per cent. improved, 19 per cent. unimproved, 9.6 per cent. without psychosis, and 2 per cent. unascertained.

In New York State, nearly 70 per cent. of the patients admitted in manic-depressive and psysconeurotic groups were discharged as recovered or improved, according to Dr. Horatio M. Pollock, statistician of the State Hospital Commission.

Death Rate Decreasing.

Readmissions of discharged patients, the report says, are most numerous in the alcoholic, manic-depressive, and dementia-pracox groups. More than half the discharges are from the manic-depressive, dementia-pracox, and psychoneurosis groups. Deaths are relatively most numerous in the organic as distinguished from the functional groups.

The general death rate per 1,000 patients under treatment in 1922 was 74.3. In 1910 the general death rate was 80.2. The lower death rate in 1922, according to the report, "confirms the general belief that the care of patients with mental diseases has improved considerably since 1910." The number of deaths in 1922 was 27.7 per cent. of the number of admissions. The number of discharges, excluding deaths and transfers was 58 per cent. of the number of admissions.

Dr. Pollock and Miss Edith M. Furbush, statistician of the National Committee, pointed out that these figures show that patients are entering institutions for mental diseases considerably faster than they are leaving. The cause for this, they believe, is that patients are less reluctant than formerly to enter institutions, and not that there is an increase in the prevalence of mental disease.

"It is highly probable," they say, "with the improved methods of hospital treatment, greater provision of medical and nursing personnel which would make possible more individual attention to patients, the development of occupation therapy, psychotherapy, &c., that still larger percentages of recovery and improvement may be expected, and that the length of hospital residence may be materially reduced.

Early Treatment a Benefit.

"A big factor that will make for larger recovery and improvement rates is the tendency of patients to secure treatment early in the course of their mental disorder, before it has become firmly established."

Miss Furbush said that the situation was far from hopeless, and disagreed with the belief that a person's career is ended when he goes to a hospital for mental diseases.

"It must be borne in mind," she went on, "that mental diseases are of various kinds. Some yield quickly to treatment, while others assume a chronic form and persist throughout the life of the patient. Taking all kinds together, about one-ahlf of the patients who enter State hospitals improve sufficiently to return to their homes, many of them after a comparatively short period of hospital care. About 72 per cent. of all cases discharged as improved had a hospital residence of less than one year, and 43 per cent. of less than four months."

WOULD USE CITY RADIO TO WARN OF WORLD END

Robert Reidt Asks Mayor Walker for Station to Tell Masses of Destruction.

Robert Reidt, Long Island's Apostle of Doom, sent a letter yesterday to Mayor Walker asking permission to broadcast a new prophecy of doom over the city radio station. Reidt, whose home is now in Baldwin, L. I., got the attention of the country last year when he waited for the end of the world at Patchogue.

The new date is Feb. 6, and the new prediction is that New York will be destroyed by fire and energy from the heavens. Mr. Reidt told the Mayor that over Station WNYC he would be able to reach a great audience.

In his letter to the Mayor, Reidt said:

"I, as far as personal comfort and safety are concerned, would rather be pursuing my trade as a painter and decorator than to hear the mocking of the unbelieving world and suffer the reproach that is my daily lot. But I love my fellow man, no matter of what creed and color. I know that I will be a lost man for all eternity if I will not do all in my power to warn the people of the destruction that is so sure to come.

"We do not want the blood of a single person on our conscience. Convinced in our very soul that it is a message from God, we have promised our Creator to do our level best in warning the people of New York. We would be glad for any assistance that your esteemed office could render. We want to reach the people some way or other. We are not after money or honor. These things we are and always have been willing to obtain by honest toil. We beg you to make it possible for us to use the city's broadcasting station or any public place or park for the purpose of reaching the masses."

REVELLER KILLS CHAUFFEUR

Negro Is Held, Believed to Have Been Celebrating New Year.

A chauffeur was shot to death while standing beside his taxicab in front of 233 West 142d Street early yesterday by an apparently intoxicated reveler firing a pistol to celebrate the coming of the New Year. The chauffeur, Edward Von Dohlen, 24 years old, of 94 West 104th Street, was killed instantly when two bullets struck him in the abdomen.

A short time after the shooting Detective Winterhalter arrested Reddy Corner, a negro, 19 years old, of 664 Lenox Avenue, whom he said he found near the taxicab with a pistol in his hand. Corner was held without bail for examination on Monday when arraigned later in the day on a charge of homicide in the Washington Heights Court before Magistrate Earl A. Smith.

$525,000,000 TAX CUT IS URGED BY JONES

NORRIS DEMANDS PUBLICITY

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—Addition of $200,000,000 to the $325,000,000 tax reduction carried in the bill now in the hands of the Senate Finance Committee was proposed tonight by Senator Jones, Democrat, of New Mexico, through a plan of spreading the payment of the public debt over a period of forty-three years instead of paying it in about twenty-five or thirty years, as is being done under the Administration program.

At the same time, Senator Norris of Nebraska, one of the insurgent Republicans, came out with a statement indicating the desperate opposition that the radicals and many of the Democrats will present toward repeal of the law making the payment of income taxes open to the world. Senator Norris argued that striking out income tax publicity from the law would lead to endless offenses.

The Couzens committee, he contended, had shown that big business through secrecy had been able to avoid payment of many millions in taxes. He also asserted that without the light of publicity many of Secretary Mellon's companies would have received undue benefits.

Debt Payments for Sinking Fund.

The plan of Senator Jones, which was first proposed by him during consideration of the 1924 tax reduction bill, will be submitted by the Democrats to the Senate Finance Committee, it was stated. In brief, he would, under his proposal, limit the reduction of the funded debt to the amount of the sinking fund. He would also have credited to the sinking fund all payments made by foreign nations under their war debts, thus reducing to that extent the money which would otherwise have to be taken out of the tax revenue to the Government.

The statement given out by Senator Norris embodying his views on tax publicity starts off with the basic thought that secrecy in Government matters has no place in a free Government.

"Particularly is this true in the immense financial transactions of the Government, in which every tax payer has a direct interest," continued the Senator. "Every citizen has a right to know not only what is done with the money he contributes to the support of the Government, but he likewise has a right to know that it is not possible, through secret manipulation, for big tax payers to avoid payment of the honest taxes which they owe under the law. This cry for secrecy of income tax returns is simply a demand on the part of interested millionaires that they should be able to avoid the payment of their honest taxes.

"Not one scintilla of evidence has been adduced to show any harm or injury by the present inadequate publicity provision. On the other hand, it is conclusively shown that an extension of this limited publicity so that the doors of the Internal Revenue Bureau shall be open to the light of day, will add many benefits and increase the revenue of the Government by many millions.

"Secrecy meant the giving to the United States Steel Corporation of about $21,000,000 in tax refunds. I understand that the publicity of this investigating committee has stopped that raid on the Treasury

Says Gulf Oil Got $4,000,000.

"Secrecy meant giving to the Gulf Oil Company about $4,000,000. Probably that is gone and cannot be recovered, but no one will contend that the case would have been handled as it was if there had been publicity. It must be remembered, too, that this company is one in which our Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, is one of the owners.

"Secrecy meant handing more than $2,000,000 to the Aluminum Company of America. Publicity, I feel sure, has prevented this subsidy; and let us not forget that this is another of Mr. Mellon's companies.

"In secret the Treasury Department has so handled the Sinclair Oil returns that they are not yet closed for the year 1926. Pitiless publicity would have aroused the public to stop that practice long ago.

"Secrecy permitted a bureau chief to defy his superiors and endeavor to hand the Standard Oil Company of California more than $3,000,000.

"The secrecy permits bureau chiefs to handle cases as the Robert Dollar case and others were undoubtedly handled to defraud the Government.

"Secrecy has permitted such orders as that in the Fairbanks case, where a special procedure was adopted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue 'for this case and this case only,' and it is doubtful if they would have dared to take this procedure in the face of the public

"Bureau chiefs have been able to resign and go into practice with tax lawyers for whom they had done 'favors' before, and to come back in thirteen days as tax practitioners in a case associated with these very lawyers and then to decide the case and deprive the Government of more than $100,000 as in the George Brothers case. Had it not been for knowledge of conditions about which the public knew nothing, such a procedure would have been impossible.

"Secrecy has so controlled employes of that bureau that they dared not tell the public of the infamous conditions which have existed there. Publicity would have prevented that reign of terror and shielding of corruption.

Says Refunds Total $1,500,000,000.

"I am told that during 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925 refunds of one kind or another, to big corporations of something like $1,500,000,000 have taken place. I understand the investigation of the Couzens Committee has shown that a large number of these refunds were frauds on the Government.

"I concede most freely that there are two sides to the question and that many Senators are honestly and conscientiously opposed to publicity in this matter; but I realize also that others, for partisan political reasons, intend to support the Administration, to surround the operations of the Internal Revenue Bureau with complete secrecy, and despite the confidence of the representatives of big business that the Administration power over the Senate is sufficient to control, I feel confident that the Senate is not going to vote for secrecy in governmental affairs in the face of this record."

LAVISHNESS OF STAGE IN CITY THRILLS GRAVES

George Graves, the London actor-manager who came here ten days ago to see American plays now running in New York, sailed at 12 o'clock last night for Southampton on the White Star liner Homeric tired out. He said that he had seen sixteen plays and attended a New Year's celebration in which the evening and the next morning were the same day.

Mr. Graves said that "The Student Prince" was the play he had enjoyed most and he had arranged with the Shubert management to produce it in London. "Of course it will have to be altered a good bit for the British public," he said. "They haven't forgotten the war yet over there."

Speaking of the change in conditions here since his last visit in 1910, Mr. Graves said, "The intelligent development of the theatre in New York during those fifteen years is nothing short of marvelous in every way, in artistry, humor, acting, safety and comfort for the public and the whole tout ensemble of the stage. The lavishness of the productions in the New York theatres gave me a thrill. The chorus and costumes would leave the average English manager dazed and could never be equaled on theo ther side. There is only one thing in New York that I found unchanged since I was here with 'The Little Michus' in 1910 and that is the overwhelming hospitality to the stranger within the gates for which this wonderful city is so justly famed. I have had so many invitations from old and new friends since I arrived ten days ago that I do not know whether I am going or coming, but I hope to get rested before the Homeric arrives at Southampton."

NO ACTORS IN THEATRE OF FUTURE, HE PREDICTS

E. Prampolini, Futurist, Says 'Abstract Forces in Play' Will Be Presented.

ROME, Jan. 1 (AP).—The theatre of the future will have no actors, according to Enrico Prampolini, Italian futurist, whose designs for a "magnetic theatre" won for him the grand theatrical prize of the Paris International Exposition of Decorative Arts.

"The actor," says Prampolini, "is a useless element in theatrical action and dangerous to the future of the theatre. He is the interpretative element which presents the most unknown quantities and the least guarantees."

The theatre of the future, contends the futurist, will replace the present institution, founded by the Greeks, by one presenting "abstract forces in play" in which each production will be "a mechanical rite of the eternal transcendence of matter, a magic revelation of a spiritual and scientific mystery."

The new theatre will present, instead of a story acted by human beings, a dramatic arrangement of forces—architectural and scenic—in which time and space will be the dynamic elements. It will have the function of "spiritual educator."

Lights, colors, plastic shapes and other purely material elements, it is explained, will be created into a dynamic whole to which onlookers—after they are trained to understand—will react as they do to the merely human theatrical action of today.

BACKS CITY COLLEGE BOYS.

Dr. Harris Praises Their Protest Against Drilling.

Dr. Maurice H. Harris, in a special address last night at Temple Israel on "Are Jews Pacifists?" upheld the attitude of the Jewish students who refused to participate in military training at the College of the City of New York.

"That was a fine attitude of the Jewish boys of the College of the City of New York to refuse to participate in military training," he said. "Insignificant to some, it was a tremendous trifle.

"Let us all have the courage of our convictions," he continued. "No one can sincerely say after the known exploits of Jews on all battlefields that we advocate war's abolition because we are afraid. Here is a great crusade in which Jews might lead. How far more beneficent than the crusades of old.

"We must prepare for this better status by a campaign of education. The martial spirit must be tabooed in literature and banished from schools. We must glorify the arts of peace and raise monuments to the averters of war. Let us evolve a new patriotism where love of one's country need not involve hatred of another."

THEATRE ENDS ITS CAREER.

The 39th St. Closing Doors Tonight, Is to Be Demolished.

The Thirty-ninth Street Theatre will officially close its doors tonight after the performance of "Laff That Off." Within a few days work upon the demolition of the theatre will begin, to make way for the construction of a large office building.

The theatre was one of the first to be built by the Shuberts and was opened by them as Nazimova's Thirty-ninth Street Theatre on April 18, 1910, with Nazimova in Ibsen's "Little Eyolf." A few years later the name of Nazimova was dropped from the theatre's title. During its existence it has housed attractions of all sorts. Among the players who have appeared there are John Mason, Margaret Anglin, John Barrymore, Blanche Ring, Lew Fields, Marie Dressler, Lew Tellegen, Douglas Fairbanks, Emily Stevens, Nora Bayes, William Faversham, Peggy Wood and William Hodge.

John Morron Is 110 Years Old.

ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt., Jan. 1 (AP).—John Morron, who first saw the light of day on Jan. 1, 1816, in New Ireland, P. Q., entered his 111th year today. He has been a resident of Vermont for more than forty years. Last Summer he worked in the potato field and says he expects to do so again next Summer. He is still active about the house of Arthur Lynaugh, with whom he lives.

PRINCE CAROL SAW NEW TIMES COMING

DEFENDED THE MONARCHY

And Urged It as a Liberalizing Force—Stressed Good Birth and the Education of the Masses.

Before his departure for England to attend the funeral of Queen Alexandra, Crown Prince Carol of Rumania gave an interview to a representative of "Adeverul," the leading Liberal afternoon daily of Bucharest, which sheds light on his ideas on such important questions as the monarchical form of government, Fascism, education, literature and the rôle of the peasantry in Rumania. The interview was on Dec. 13 and has added interest now as a result of Carol's mysterious renunciation of the throne and of his royal prerogatives.

With regard to monarchical Government, Carol said:

"To tell the truth I have never raised that question to myself and I don't know what to reply. No, I cannot. * * * If you wish to have my own opinion, I can tell you that I am a monarchist and that I am convinced that if the monarchical system is not a physical necessity it is nevertheless an invention useful for insufficiently developed countries. I have the impression that the monarchical traditions are very important to the preservation of national unity, both theoretically and practically speaking. I think that the monarchy is the best guarantee of the democratic development of a country, in the best sense of the term.

"The question whether the monarchy is an agreeable institution to us, whose fate imposed upon them the rôle of rulers, that is a different question."

The definition of democracy was a question welcomed by the Crown Prince.

"That is a question," he said, "which I know how to answer. At any rate, I can give you my own definition of it. The conception of democracy assumes the right of every person, irrespective of birth, wealth or other considerations, to rise to that position to which he is entitled by virtue of his capabilities and the worth of his individuality. I, too, am a democrat. Nevertheless, I think that the conception of democracy has degenerated because I notice that the principal tendency of modern democracy is the desire to bring forward nonentities for the most important posts."

All other things being equal, Carol prefers men of noble blood to those of "baser" blood.

"In the fact that one belongs to an old family, that his ancestors have served their country generation after generation and that the experiences thus acquired are inherited, I do not see any evil," he said. "If I had to choose between two persons, one belonging to the proletariat and the other to a family well known and with a record of great service to its country, I sincerely confess to you that I would prefer the latter. That is, other things being equal."

Believes in the Family.

"I believe with firmness and awe in the importance of the family," he earnestly said. "It is rare that geniuses are born in an uncultivated land. In most cases the man is born endowed with the experience and capabilities of his family through atavism. I beg you to believe me that it is not the first generation that creates the genius. A certain preparation is indispensable. The peasant who remarked to me 'There is something in blood,' meant the same thing.

"Here in Rumania we are all democrats, of course. Nevertheless, I do not think that we have reached the last step of evolution. There is enough that we still have to achieve. I sincerely believe that modern democracy will appreciate toil later better than we do now. As I look over Europe, such as I know it, I cannot help feeling that only in Belgium and Italy have the peoples buckled to intensive toil."

The mention of Italy evoked a question on the meaning of Fascism. "What do you think about Fascism?" the Prince was asked.

"It is rather a delicate question and a political one you put," Carol replied. "There is one thing that strikes me, and that is the surprising and immense diffrence between the Italy of today and the Italy before the conquest of Rome by the 'Black Shirts.' Fascism and its 'duce' have wrought a sort if miracle. In the domain of foreign affairs Mussolini has accomplished extraordinary things. It is still enigmatic to me how he managed to accomplish all he has. We must not forget the problem of the great natural growth of the population annually, which problem Mussolini has had to deal with; and, for all that, everybody works there."

The danger of Bolshevism lies in propaganda, the Prince said.

"I think," he added, "that Bolshevism has changed the direction of its principal objectives. The Bolsheviki themselves have realized that they had gone too far. Actually, the danger of Bolshevism lies in the fact that it has developed 'an article of export'—propaganda."

"Is your Royal Highness satisfied with the present status of the education of Rumanian youth?" Carol was asked.

"I think I can answer yes," he replied, "with certain qualifications. So far as I am aware the situation now is much better than a few years ago when I took the initiative in the movement for a healthy growth, nationally and rationally, of our youth. We must not forget the difficulties. We all live in post-bellum days. The war has brought about demoralization. Many politicians and so-called statesmen forget altogether their mission of serving the State and the people. There was never more widespread demoralization than today."

Stresses the Economic Factor.

The importance of the economic factor in the life of the country was stressed by the Prince. A real statesman, he said, must have a perfect knowledge of economic problems. The discussion was then led by Carol to the question of the peasantry.

"We have given the peasants land," he said, "which they cultivate. We have given all political rights. I am convinced that the peasant is the healthiest element, the least demoralized element of the people. That cannot be doubted. I wish that the peasant did nothing else but labor on his land. I regret to add that our peasant does not know how to read or write. I think that the time has come when he should be taught. If they are not going to learn how to read and write, our country will begin to decay. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that a system of universal education be introduced as quickly as possible. It is a question of life and death with Rumania."

The Prince explained why he was interested in education.

"Our youth," he said, "represents the future of the nation and the latter will be precisely what it makes of its youth. I do not think that the youth should be brought up in 'our likeness.' Not at all! Youth ought to be taught to have its own opinions. Let them find out for themselves. We should implant in our youth the conviction that, constructing its own home through its own toil and efforts, it is going to form a happy nation and a greater one, in the real sense of the world, than the present generation.

"Men have been led until now too much by phrases and demagogy. There is little development of the instinct for 'good and evil,' that great boon granted every one by the Creator. The young generation ought to be taught to judge objectively, to limit itself to that which concerns it, to take care of its own work and not of that of others.

"Today the people are exalted. We talk of the omnipotence of the people, and at the same time we forget to do anything for the people. For this reason I consider it my duty to coordinate the feeble efforts to make this a happier people through nation-wide education."

With the words "We are on the threshold of new times" the Prince brought the interview to a close.

PRAISES LOCARNO TREATIES

Dr. Goldstein Calls Agreement of Significance to Israel.

The trial and acquittal of Stanislaw Steiger in Poland, the appointment of Lord Plumer as High Commissioner for Palestine, and the ratification of the Locarno treaties constitute the three outstanding events of import to Jews in 1925, in the opinion of Rabbi Israel Goldstein of the Congregation B'nai Jeshurun, Eighty-eighth Street and West End Avenue. In his New Year sermon last night Rabbi Goldstein said that these three were events "of major significance" for the Jewish people.

The outcome of the Steiger case, Rabbi Goldstein said, "proves that the Polish courts did not dare to do what the French courts did dare to do in the Dreyfus case a generation ago.

"The appointment of Lord Plumer as High Commissioner for Palestine to succeed Sir Herbert Samuel, who had resigned, aroused at first a great deal of disappointment in Jewish circles," Rabbi Goldstein declared. "As it turns out, however, the incumbent is continuing the policies of his predecessor which have so powerfully conduced toward the upbuilding of Palestine."

Dr. Goldstein said: "The event of outstanding import to the welfare of Israel in Europe has been the ratification of the Locarno treaties, which, it is hoped, will make peace an actual condition in Europe. Whatever event has a stabilizing influence upon European powers is bound to be of beneficent consequence for Jewish life in those countries.

ROSENWASSER GIFT PRAISED AT DINNER

Shoe Manufacturer Who Is to Give Business to Employes Is Honored by Them.

PUTS VALUE AT $1,000,000

Will Work Out Plan for His Aids to Buy Entire Concern, Making Present of the Good-Will.

Morris Rosenwasser, President of Rosenwasser Brothers, Inc., shoe manufacturers, with a plant at Long Island City, who announced on Dec. 21 that he would present to his employes the good-will of the concern, valued at approximately $1,000,000, and would work out a plan whereby they might purchase the business, which had a turnover of $6,000,000 last year, out of future profits, was the guest of honor last night at a dinner given at the Hotel Biltmore by fifty of his friends and employes.

The occasion was a celebration of the consummation of Mr. Rosenwasser's program for disposing of his interests, and announcement was made that while the company would continue under the general name of Rosenwasser Factories the business would be subdivided into subsidiaries, each operating as an individual concern. These subsidiaries, with the men who will conduct them, are as follows:

Berkeley Shoe Corporation, slipper manufacturers, Bertram Berkow, formerly a director and Treasurer of Rosenwasser Brothers, Inc., President; associated with him, Lester B. Jones, Sydney Donheiser and Tony Carillo.

Dreadnaught Shoes, Inc., manufacturers of stitch-down shoes, to be conducted under the guidance of Albert Raskin, Harry Lindenbaum, Abraham Chodorow, David Rosenwasser, Abraham Glick, Isidor Bluestein, Max Bunis and Louis Romanoff, all formerly identified with the parent company.

Crown Legging Company, with Jack S. Rosen, Sam Glickstein, Isaac Tauchner and Sam Meyerowitz, also formerly identified with the parent company, in charge.

Mr. Rosenwasser said that he was now engaged in determining a valuation for the properties at which the employes would be enabled to take them over, and that this valuation would be several millions under a fair market valuation. He also said that he would continue to direct the organization until such time as he felt he could safely relinquish his stewardship, and that he was prepared to give his employes such financial backing and assistance as might be necessary until they purchase his holdings.

The speakers, who praised Mr. Rosenwasser, were Congressman Emanuel Celler of Brooklyn, who was toastmaster; F. William Greenfield, Milton Blow, William N. Kirschner and S. Bertram Berkow, who presented Mr. Rosenwasser with a silver loving cup. Mr. Rosenwasser expressed his appreciation of the gift and the sentiment that prompted it and wished his former employes success in the business which he has conducted for thirty-five years and is now one of the largest shoe factories in the United States. Letters of regret at their inability to be present were read from Borough President Maurice E. Connolly of Queens and Supreme Court Justice Burt J. Humphrey. Beside those already mentioned, others present were: Ira H. Rosenwasser, a son of Morris Rosenwasser; Milo Frank, Norman Frank, J. R. Goldsmith, Charles E. Goldstein, S. K. Steiner and M. A. Blutman.

Increases Lamont Fund at Yale.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 1.—George F. Dominick Jr., Yale '94, of Greenwich, Conn., and New York City, by a gift of $1,000 has doubled the endowment of the lectureship fund established by him at Yale University in 1906 in honor of Daniel S. Lamont, Secretary of War during the second Cleveland Administration. The lectureship, which is known as the Daniel S. Lamont Memorial Lectureship, provides for an annual lecture on "English Letter Writers and Letter Writing" by a member of the Yale Faculty.

prise of Carol's act, for it is not understood why he should make such a promise voluntarily. It also confirms the belief that negotiations over the abdication had been going on secretly within the royal family for a long time, at least since the birth of Michael. Carol's letter was mailed from Venice.

The latest rumor afloat is that his love affair is no longer with Zizi but with a Jewess with whom he is said to have been recently in London and is reported with him now in Venice.

"Such is my New Year," the King remarked when the members of the Government came to Princess Helen's apartments today to hail her baby son as heir to the throne of Rumania. The tone in which the words were spoken, however, was not reported.

The Princess and Queen Marie, who were also present, seemed to take the situation calmly, which strengthens the belief that negotiations had been going on previously.

At the meeting of the Crown Council to accept the abdication, at which the members of the Cabinet, the Opposition leaders, the Patriarch, General Pressu during the war Commander-in-Chief of the army, were present, it was provisionally decided that Prince Nicholas, the younger brother of Carol, the Patriarch and General Pressu be regents for Prince Michael; if King Ferdinand dies before his grandson comes of age. All the members of the council pledged allegiance to Michael.

A Cabinet meeting tomorrow will consider the disposition of Carol's property, as he has renounced all princely rights.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—An Englishman writing anonymously in The Evening News recounts the intimate details of the romantic love story which may be behind the renunciation of the Rumanian throne by Crown Prince Carol.

He was in Rumania during the World War, he says, and knew the Prince well. During a journey by train he accidentally met Mlle. Zizi Lambrino, a fellow-traveller, who assisted him in making himself understood to the railway conductor. Later, when he had forgotten the incident, Prince Carol reminded him of it and informed him that he himself was hopelessly in love with the young woman, who was the daughter of a Rumanian General.

Soon afterward the Prince eloped with her to Russia and married her at Odessa. Passionately devoted to her, Carol later ran the risk of being shot as a deserter by going to her in enemy territory. He was arrested by his own troops and only his rank saved him from court-martial. After the war Carol was induced to give up Mlle. Zizi and he married Princess Helen of Greece in 1921. A son, Michael, was born to them, who now becomes the Crown Prince of Rumania.

Carol, with his wife and child, visited England in 1924 and it was plain then to the Prince's friends that he had not forgotten Zizi. It is reported that Carol will seek a divorce to remarry Zizi.

LONDON, Jan. 1 (AP).—The correspondent of The Daily Express in Vienna says Carol's withdrawal was due to his deep political and personal antagonism for Queen Marie and Premier Bratiano. Carol favored General Averesco, leader of the Opposition, for Premier, it is said, being fearful of a great disaster for Rumania through a continuation of the rule of Bratiano.

The belief is expressed in diplomatic circles, the correspondent adds, that the hot-blooded Prince had prepared steps for the overthrow of Bratiano and that discovery of the plot caused him to renounce the throne.

Hears of Love for Italian Woman.

VIENNA, Jan. 1 (AP).—A high personage here has informed The Associated Press that Carol of Rumania is in Venice with a Rumano-Italian woman with whom the Prince became infatuated last Summer, and not with his former morganatic wife, Mlle. Lambrino, as has been rumored.

This personage said that the Prince's new relationship is particularly distressing to the royal family because his son by his marriage with Princess Helen is weak in health.

MILAN, Jan. 1 (AP).—The Corriere Della Sera says the director of the hotel at which former Crown Prince Carol of Rumania is stopping in Milan was ordered yesterday to prepare for the arrival of a "distinguished lady," and that this is being interpreted locally as meaning Carol's wife, Princess Helen of Greece.

The newspaper doubts reports that Carol is involved in a love affair with a lady in Milanese society. It notes, however, that he has been in Milan nearly a month, and says he gave orders to the personnel of the hotel not to divulge his presence.

On the day of his arrival, says the newspaper, "an elegant young woman calling herself Princess Lupesco," registered at the same hotel.

Carol and the alleged Princess saw little of each other in public. The Crown Prince made frequent excursions alone. Lately he decided to take his meals in his private apartment. He did not seem to lack funds, for he arrived in a luxurious automobile and did not deny himself anything when he went shopping.

"Tongues are wagging over whether Princess Lupesco and Carol's former wife, Mlle. Lambrino, are not one and the same person," says the newspaper.

PARIS, Jan. 1 (AP).—The position of little 4-year-old Prince Mihai—Rumanian for Michael—suddenly thrust into the Crown Princeship by the action of his father, Prince Carol, in renouncing his succession rights to the Rumanian throne, is being much discussed in all diplomatic circles in this centre of Old World gossip.

The youngster is reported to be frail and backward, thus necessitating a period of regency should untoward circumstances bring to an end the reign of the present well-liked King, Ferdinand.

Prerogatives are Revoked.

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Jan. 1 (AP).—Carol's renunciation of his position as heir to the Rumanian throne, with the loss of all his royal prerogatives and membership in the royal family, has caused great excitement throughout Rumania.

The King, who yesterday made it known that he had acceded to the request of his son, submitted in writing from some place outside the Rumanian capital, that he be permitted to give up his rights to the throne, today summoned a Crown Council to meet at Sinaia, the royal country seat, and presented the situation to the councilors.

King Ferdinand asked and obtained an agreement permitting the succession rights to pass to Prince Michael, Carol's four-year-old son who was born of the union with Princess Helen of Greece.

Although yesterday's announcement of Carol's renunciation came after the Crown Prince had been absent from Bucharest for several weeks and his whereabouts had caused the King and Queen some concern, just what prompted his act has not become known. His dislike of anything savoring of royal form has been no secret, and this together with his love affairs in the past, has caused the spread of all sorts of rumors.

The Crown Council today included representatives of all the political parties, as well as the Cabniet Ministers, the Chief Patriarch of the Orthodox Church, the Presidents of the Chamber and Senate and General Presan, who was Commander-in-Chief of the Rumanian Army during the war.

Parliament will meet on Monday to pass on the legal formalities necessary for a change in succession.

MUSIC

By OLIN DOWNES.

Paul Whiteman's Novelties.

The program given by Paul Whiteman and his great concert orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall had as its major items Deems Taylor's instrumental suite "Circus Day" and George Gershwin's "jazz opera," known as "135th Street," the text by B. G. de Sylva. Both of these works were scored by Ferdie Grofe, who knows at least as much about "jazz" orchestration as any man living, and whose remarkable instrumental combinations were one of the particular triumphs of this concert.

Mr. Taylor's "Circus Day" is amusing and very well composed. It is humorously descriptive music. There are various kinds of descriptive music, some good and some poor. "Circus Day" has wit and invention. "This is not one of the colossal, three-ringed aggregations that travel in special trains," says Mr. Taylor of his fantasy. His circus is a one-ring affair. The admission is a quarter, "but it is worth it"! The small town boy follows the band and enters the big tent. There he sees the bareback riders, the jugglers and clowns; the trained animals, including lions and tigers, seals, monkeys and elephants dancing a waltz; trapeze performers and the maiden who takes the "slide to death," assisted in the one and only manner she should be by the orchestra—namely, the snare drum and the whack of the big drum when she lands. The loping of the horses about the ring and the motions of the jugglers are suggestively conveyed, and in a manner more than the merely ingenious, Mr. Grofe helps Mr. Taylor to make the lions and other animals audible, and this, too, is amusing and indicative of what Mr. Whiteman's instruments and players can do. Mr. Taylor very sensibly had Mr. Grofe instrumentate for him, but Mr. Grofe had material to instrumentate, material clearly conceived and clean-cut in its structure. The result was a composition that accomplished what it set out to do very well.

Mr. Grofe was not less sympathetic and skillful in serving the needs of Mr. Gershwin than he was of Mr. Taylor. The Gershwin score was sketched seven or eight years ago for the musical comedy stage. In performance it takes twenty-five minutes. The scene is a cellar and bar in Harlem in momentary danger of a closing by the police; the characters are negroes, the subject a simple and tragic episode consequent upon "a woman's intuition gone wrong," as a solo singer, al la "Pagliacci," explains.

In the score itself there is excellent material. The writer was fortunate in hearing it rehearsed by orchestra without singers or action. There are not only some good melodies, but certain genuinely dramatic passages, some use of dissonance that is striking and germane to the stage situation, and finally a considerable degree of flexibility and the rudiments of dramatic commentary. More than once Mr. Gershwin breaks up his duple rhythms and employs scraps and fragments in a manner that is free, emotional, theatrical.

Now this may astonish some who listened last night and who felt, perhaps with the writer, that "135th Street" did not on the whole come off. Nor was the music over-effective. But these facts are not inconsistent. What was shown last night was the enormous distance that lies in writing for orchestra and for the set songs and choruses of musical comedy, on the one side, and the writing of significant recitative and an effective libretto on the other. All that is best in a piece which has a subject and an idiom rich in possibilities is in the orchestral score, aside from everything else in the production.

The libretto, if such it can be called, is very poor for its purposes. It is after all only the sketch of a vaudeville act and not the nub of a realistic music drama. There is no centralizing or emphasis of motive. The climax—the shooting of the lover by his girl, gone mad with jealousy—comes without any preparation and is over before the audience has even begun to expect that it will happen. Nor did the comedians come up to the hopes of those who found possibilities in Mr. Gershwin's music. They performed as those doing a vaudeville turn, and not with unconventional or emotional intensity—but then, that would have been hard with the de Sylva lines.

There was also the great disadvantage of a concert platform for what should have been seen on a stage. A few chairs and table, with an apology for a bar, gave no suggestion of the scene described in the libretto. Furthermore, the orchestra was too near the singers; even Mr. Whiteman's control could not keep the instrumental tone as far down as needed for the best good of the vocal parts. As a result even the set melodies failed to reach the audience as they should over the footlights. For all that, there is in this work a potentiality for more than operetta, which is its main importance to Mr. Gershwin. With a properly fashioned libretto he might go far. The cast was that of the first performance last Tuesday night: Joe, Charles Hart; Vi, Blossom Seeley; Tom, Jack MacGowan; Mike, Austin Young; Sam, Benny Fields; Cokey Lou, Francis Howard, and Mr. Whiteman conducting.

HOLIDAY THRONGS AT OPERA

Jeritza in 'The Jewels' at Matinee—Rose Ponselle in 'Gioconda.'

Jeritza in "The Jewels of the Madonna" and Rose Ponselle in "La Gioconda" sang to sold-out houses at the Metropolitan in yesterday's pair of opera performances. The special New Year's matinee engaged also Martinelli, Danise and the cast of the recent revival, under Papi's direction. With Miss Ponselle last evening appeared Chamlee, De Luca, Mardones, the Misses Gordon and Alcock, and Serafin at the baton.

This afternoon brings a first hearing in this part of the world for Giordano's new opera on the play of "The Jest." Tonight Mme. Rethberg sings her first Elizabeth in "Tannhauser."

NEW YEAR'S AT PALM BEACH.

PALM BEACH, Fla., Jan. 1.—Palm Beach is recovering today from one of the liveliest New Year's Eve celebrations in the history of this resort. Hundreds of merrymakers crowded into the Venetian Gardens of the Hotel Royal Danell to welcome the new year. So great was the demand for reservations that several large rooms adjoining the gardens and the hotel dining room were pressed into service, but even then hundreds of persons failed to get accommodations.

Caleb Bragg entertained sixty guests, which included many of the most prominent society persons in Palm Beach. A special exhibition dance was given by Marion and Randall. Another large party was also given by Addison Mizner at Boca Raton, and early in the evening the first cakewalk of the season was held at the Royal Poinciana. Whitehall and the Everglades Club opened today.

ACTRESS LOSES EARRING.

Irene Bordoni Offers $1,000 and Gets Detectives to Hunt Pearl.

Acting on the possibility that her pearl earring may have been stolen on New Year's Eve, Irene Bordoni, actress, has engaged private detectives to search for it.

Miss Bordoni first missed the pear-shaped earring, a wedding gift from her husband, E. Ray Goetz, when she arrived at the Lyceum Theatre New Year's Eve, after she had walked through the crowd in West Forty-sixth Street to the stage entrance, when her chauffeur was held up by fire apparatus.

In the belief that the jewel may have been lost, the actress has advertised a reward of $1,000 for its recovery.

SEES STAGE HERE FREE OF FOREIGN INFLUENCE

French Professor Says Theatre in America Interprets Uniqueness of Our Life.

PARIS, Jan. 1.—Professor Leonie Villard, who occupies the chair of English and American literature on the Lyons Faculty of Letters, writes in an interesting analysis of the American stage in the Mercure de France: "Such as it appears today—turned toward the development of the riches which the American soil furnishes, probably forever drawn away from imitation of European models and developing outside of foreign influences—the American stage is a new stage of adapted tendencies and aspirations peculiar to America.

"This stage, which creates a new technique for new possibilities in dramatic expression, is something more than an experimental field, opened to hardy though already fruitful attempts. For the first time the American theatre has given Europe through the work of Eugene O'Neill a revelation quite as characteristic as that given in the last century in the field of lyric poetry by the powerful genius of Walt Whitman. For the first time, too, the American theatre has added a chapter of capital importance in the literary history of the country. Even more it contributes in large measure to the present great task of renaissance because in consecrating itself to the interpretation of all that gives character and unique savor to American life the theatre of today brings a precious enrichment of the national conscience."

Villard says the American stage typifies spontaneity and action as differentiated from the classical European attempt to portray characters with the utmost minuteness.

MUSIC NOTES.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art announces its annual series of free orchestral concerts, starting next Saturday, Jan. 9, when David Mannes will conduct Beethoven's fifth symphony, Debussy's "Carnival" and Sibelius's "Finlandia."

THE MAYOR ASKS COOPERATION.

The distinctive note of Mayor WALKER's address at the City Hall yesterday is its frank appeal for cooperation. The new Mayor does not disclaim responsibility. He knows that he cannot evade it, no matter what happens. But he calls upon public-spirited citizens, together with every kind of civic organization and local society, to aid him in his great task. He promises courtesy and considerate attention to all, and requests the help of all. This is a novel policy, which we do not doubt is sincerely put forth by Mayor WALKER; and if it is carried out as he hopes it may be, it will give our municipal government a cooperative aspect such as it has not known.

By his chief appointments to office, Mayor WALKER gives the city a pretty clear idea of how he intends to fill the administrative positions. His choice of a new Police Commissioner deserves the praise for good intentions which it has received. For Health Commissioner Mr. WALKER has selected a physician, Dr. LOUIS I. HARRIS, who by training, long and skilled service in the Health Department, and by the warm approval of the medical profession, is shown to be eminently fitted for his important post. The new Mayor also speaks positively of his purpose to secure the highest character and ability in the work of conducting the public schools of the city. When he comes to make appointments to the Board of Education, we shall know whether he is prepared to follow up his pledges with performance.

His general plan is apparent. He wants to take the police and the schools and the supervision of public health out of politics. Those three departments he would free from the suspicion that they are to be made a happy hunting ground for Tammany dispensers of patronage. But, of course, when we turn to the other great administrative departments of the City Government, we find their heads to be men chosen mainly for political reasons. This would cover most of the reappointments, though it is only fair to point out the advantage of keeping men like the Fire Commissioner, the Street Commissioner and some others in charge of the jobs which they have learned. All told, in this matter of filling the important offices, Mayor WALKER has fulfilled the prediction that he would name the best men he could find for the three departments which are most conspicuous in the eyes of the people, but would organize and administer the others on a partisan basis.

Mayor WALKER's plea for cooperation ought to be heeded. If he desires expert advice, it should be given him; if he wishes special information, it should be laid before him; if he calls for active help in dealing with problems local to any part of the city, it should not fail him. He squarely puts a part of the obligation to furnish good government up to individual citizens and organized bodies. If they do not at least offer to come to the scratch, they will deprive themselves of the right to criticize severely what the Mayor may do unaided.

CAN THE FARMERS AGREE.

President COOLIDGE is anxious to do what the farmers want. But do they know what they want? Are they going to be able to get together as respects a legislative program for their special benefit? It is a shrewd guess that the President does not believe that they can present a united front. Already he has had a telegram from one farmers' convention in Iowa notifying him that a previous farmers' convention in the same State was not made up of simon-pure sons of the soil. The hint was plain that bankers and industrial concerns were secretly pulling the wires that controlled ostensible farmer delegates. At all events, Mr. COOLIDGE may well take the position that he is not called upon to work out a plan of salvation for the farmers unless they are of one mind concerning what they are to be saved from and how the work is to be done.

Their embarrassment and divisions will not be lessened by the telegram which President COOLIDGE sent the other day to the Iowa farmers in convention assembled. In it he declared that it was a mistake to say that he was against any plan for Government aid in marketing abroad the surplus of farm products. But he insisted that such a plan must be economically sound. Moreover, he stipulated that it must not involve price-fixing. Nor must it imply that the Government was directly and actively to engage in selling cotton, wheat, corn, and so forth, whether at home or abroad. Meet these conditions, said the President in effect, and I am with you. But the farmers must know, and Mr. COOLIDGE himself cannot be entirely ignorant, that these demands are impossible of fulfillment. The President's modest request is very like inviting the farmers to square the circle or to balance the Washington Monument on the tips of their noses. Without price-fixing, and without Government buying and selling, the whole scheme of disposing of our agricultural surplus abroad can come to little or nothing. Only get together, urges the President. But the probability is that the one particular on which the farmers will find it possible to get together will be in resenting and possibly denouncing the cruel dilemma into which Mr. COOLIDGE appears to be planning to force them.

THE SHENANDOAH REPORT.

In reporting its conclusions about the Shenandoah disaster, the Naval Court of Inquiry, of which Rear Admiral HILARY P. JONES was President, says that it was "unable definitely to determine" whether "prior minor damage" to the fabric caused by excessive pressure in the helium gas cells was "a determining factor in the final break-up." Captain ANTON HEINEN, adviser in the building of the Shenandoah and a competent pilot, has always maintained that, while the Shenandoah as originally designed was the "safest thing in the world," her resistance to storm pressure was greatly weakened by reduction of the automatic gas valves from eighteen to ten. "I cannot put it too strongly," he said, "that if it had not been "for the foolishness in cutting down "the number of safety valves the "crash would not have occurred." As he read the catastrophe, the Shenandoah shot up too fast to escape the violence of the gale for the remaining valves to discharge gas, with the result that uncontrollable expansion of the bags burst the great envelope asunder. This view was disputed by Commander ROSENDAHL and Lieutenant R. G. MEYER, whom the Court called. ROSENDAHL declared that "the ship was destroyed by aero-"dynamic stresses imposed upon it "by the vertical forces of the gale, "and that the gas had nothing to "do with the disaster." He contended that no dirigible could be built to withstand such a strain as the Shenandoah encountered.

Lieutenant MEYER testified that he recommended a change in the number of valves, and that Commander LANSDOWNE approved of the elimination of eight of them. MEYER believed that the factor of safety was not diminished by the reduction of valves. The difference of opinion was so sharp that the Court must have given careful thought to the qualifications of witnesses as experts in construction. It is significant that the Court pronounces the opinion that the reduction of gas valves was "inadvisable." But that conclusion does not sustain the view of Captain HEINEN that the real cause of the disaster was the elimination of valves. In the wreck of the ship it was no factor at all, according to Commander WEYERBACHER, Chief Engineer of the Philadelphia naval aircraft factory. "A dirigible proceeding under full power," he said at the inquiry, "may escape a storm," but once it is caught "in the vortex" it is doomed. There are degrees of violence in storms, and the court of inquiry seems to have ruled against a radical reduction of valves in future.

The unanimous report holds that "the conduct of all officers and men was deserving of the highest praise." No one has questioned that. Even Captain HEINEN, who wanted to be fair, although he weakened his argument by aggressiveness, declared that he would have handled the ship, once in the grip of the storm, just as Lieutenant Commander LANSDOWNE did. It is noticeable that the Court, disposed to admit that gas pressure due to "rate of rise" may have done some damage to the structure, concludes that it was "not sufficient "to have endangered the ship under "normal operation conditions." This is fairly in accord with Commander WEYERBACHER, who held that, being caught in the centre of the storm, the Shenandoah could not escape her fate. The Court finds that there was evidence that, whatever protests he may have made against taking the Shenandoah west in July, Lieut. Commander LANSDOWNE did not exhibit reluctance to making the flight early in September. The Court points out that "the weather maps and reports "indicated nothing which would have "rendered it unsafe or inadvisable." True, but some means should have been found to give the Shenandoah regular meteorological information as she proceeded. The Court frankly agrees with Mrs. LANSDOWNE that her husband should not have been sent on an exhibition flight. At least, that is to be inferred from its opinion that "such movements should be limited to essential naval and military "operations in so far as possible, especially in the case of new and experimental types." It cannot be denied that preparations to send the Shenandoah to the Middle West were pushed so that she could take in the fairs.

TAXES AND PRICES.

Those who think that public benefits provided by taxation are cheap and paid for by somebody else are getting much to think about. The effect of the increased cost of government upon the cost of shelter in this city was described to the joint conference upon taxation by Mr. ALLAN ROBINSON. Increases in city taxes are reflected in higher rents, higher prices for food and clothing and a decrease in the surplus of wage earners. The debt service item in the New York City budget accounts for over a fifth of the total. Those who think that railway wages should be raised and rates reduced fail to take into account the fact that railway taxes exceed dividends paid. According to Mr. AISHTON, President of the American Railway Association, railway taxes in 1924 were $84,000,000, no less than 30 per cent. over 1921, and in 1925 are larger by 6 per cent.

There is a political as well as a financial drawback to indefinite increase of taxation. President COOLIDGE has earnestly protested against saddling the duties of the States upon the United States. The same note was struck by Mr. VINCENT MURPHY, Controller of New York State, at the convention of State Controllers. Many States, he said, adopt the "let Washington do it" policy, because it reduces State taxation by Federal contribution. But taxes by whomever collected increase the cost of living. The reason that Governments are extravagant is that they have no fear of insolvency, because they keep no capital accounts. The capital wasted by Government extravagance is the capital of the taxpayers, even though they fancy that they are only wage earners and do not see that they pay taxes through the cost of living shown in the bills they pay every day. Rich men do not pay the poor man's tax bills. Those who levy taxes are discovering this.

RUSSIA IN 1926.

LEON TROTSKY, in the Fall of 1923, led the first formidable opposition within the Russian Communist Party, and as a result was removed from his post at the head of the Red Army and from the inner circles of power. He has now been re-elected to the Central Executive Committee of the party. ZINOVIEFF, KAMENEFF and SOKOLNIKOFF, who fought TROTSKY in 1923 but who defended his ideas in the Communist Congress just concluding its sessions, have retained their positions on the Central Committee. Whatever may be the cleavage of opinion, the extraordinary discipline of the Communist organization has asserted itself. The minority cries out but submits. Whether this can permanently continue is another question. For the moment, Communists of various shades still recognize that self-preservation demands unity. As TROTSKY wrote four years ago in defending the Government's harsh treatment of its non-Bolshevist opponents despite their "unblemished record as veteran revolutionists, the Soviet Government is still a "beleaguered fortress" surrounded by a world of enemies. It must have discipline at all costs.

The Soviet Government begins the new year with the advocates of moderation in control. STALIN, the strongest figure at Moscow, has brushed aside the Opposition's plaints against a policy of excessive conciliation with regard to the peasants. He has refused to revive the class war in the village, in which the Communists four years ago sought to mobilize the "poor" peasant against the "rich" peasant. The experience of these four years has demonstrated the futility of Communist doctrine in face of hard fact. The Soviet Government must learn to work with the peasant or ultimately be destroyed by the peasant. The latest lesson on this point has come from the new harvest, on which such great hopes were based. Russia's wheat crop has been greatly overestimated. The Soviet agencies have failed to secure control of whatever exportable grain surplus exists. They have been outmanoeuvred by the private traders. It is all very well to throw the blame on the Kulaks or "rich" peasants. The fact remains that they have been efficient and the Government agencies have been miserably inefficient. STALIN prefers to do business with the men who have the grain to export.

In this crop situation may also be found the reason for the conciliatory tone with regard to foreign affairs prevailing at the Communist Congress. From ZINOVIEFF's Third International the Soviet Government has derived little profit. His meddling in Great Britain, France and elsewhere has made hard the life of the Soviet's diplomats abroad. Were Russia today in a position to throw a big grain export on the world market, the cash thus made available for purchases abroad would go far to reconciling foreign merchants and Governments to ZINOVIEFF's pretty ways. With much smaller trade prizes to dangle before foreign eyes, Russia has to watch her step. A Berlin correspondent in yesterday's TIMES remarks: "Experience shows that failures and setbacks invariably influence Moscow "toward a more placable international "attitude."

A POET-SCIENTIST.

It has been said that a poet should tent along with the scientist out on the verges of the known as he advances into the terra incognita that lies ever beyond—some one who can interpret to the multitude what the scientist is usually unable to make known to the lay mind in its significance or relationships. Sometimes, however, though rarely, the scientist is himself a poet, a duovir, who is able to make patient original researches in some field of the wide realm of nature and who is also adept in interpretation and divination.

Such a scientist is the present President of the American Association of Science, Dr. MICHAEL IDVORSKY PUPIN. He has risen to a foremost and secure place in the physical science whose patron saint, to him, was JOSEPH HENRY. But any one who has read Professor PUPIN's autobiography, or that briefer biography entitled "A Herdsman's View of Human Life," must know that he has also the poetical gift of a psalmist and the power of a prophet to interpret visions. After describing his experiences as a shepherd boy by night on the plains of Serbia he continues:

> On such nights we were all eyes and ears, catching every sound and watching the stars, so as not to permit that a single unguarded moment separate us from our grazing animals. The world of sound and of starlight messages was the only world which existed in our consciousness during those watchful hours; the rest of the world had disappeared in the blackness of the night. It did not reappear until the pale streamers of the early dawn announced what we boys believed to be GOD's command: "Let there be light!" And then gradually the rising sun, as if by an act of creation, disclosed to our anxious eyes the gayly colored garment of the terrestrial world. Every one of those joyous mornings of fifty years ago made me feel that I was witnessing the creation of the world as it is described in the first chapter of Genesis.

The scientist elected to succeed Dr. PUPIN is, happily, also a man who combines in one person the abilities both of a scientist and an interpreter, a poet—Dr. LIBERTY H. BAILEY of Ithaca, N. Y. He has written a number of scientific treatises and has been dean of one of the greatest schools of agriculture in the world. Lately he has made an extensive and intensive study in South America of the palm tree. But he is perhaps even more widely known for his writings about nature for those who are not themselves scientists, but wish to know more of the world about them. He has even put some of his observations and interpretations into verse. One poem called "Outlook" presents his view of human life. Dr. BAILEY, as many another of his generation, was told in his early days that but as he came to inquire of nature he found the tribes of men ascending "each from lower round" and in turn predicting "uprising forms." He refuses to blaspheme the perfecting works of GOD. He sees no "blank defeat" or "canker set against the heart." He sees some such "vista vast" as Professor MOULTON predicts for the planet. He fears not to look when he has eyes to see and "dreadless" awaits his destiny standing "within the cosmic sea."

We sinned all,

His immediate predecessors in this high office have had to do with the stars, the forces that are lending themselves to man's use, and the psychology of man himself. Dr. BAILEY's interest is in the earth on which and out of which we live and man's relation to it. The title which he gave to one of his books of essays suggests his own attitude toward it, "The Holy Earth," which the Creator after His six days of creation pronounced to be very good and whose "goodness" Dr. BAILEY still finds the basic fact in our existence.

HAMS ACROSS THE SEA.

Mr. HERBERT MUNDIN (of late a Charlot comedian), having remarked in London that art in New York "is "something which is turned out at so "much per yard," Mr. AL WOODS (professedly a commercial producer) retorts that "the worst ham in the "two-a-day uses the word art 80,000 "times oftener than SHAKESPEARE." Thereupon Mr. DOUGLAS FURBER (who has "replaced MUNDIN" in the present Charlot cast) rebukes his fellow-countryman with all the authority of the man who "discovered MUNDIN and gave him his first big chance" as an artist. Surely his prototype and protégé "must have been misunderstood." Mr. FURBER "has noted with "amazement the power of art for "art's sake in this country." He deplores the tempest blowing across the sea because the Charlot Reviewsters, presumably including the recreant Mr. MUNDIN, "have found American hospitality and kindness almost quixotic "in its selflessness and generosity."

It is hardly an occasion for amenities. As the hardy Latins used to say, through asperities to the stars! Mr. MUNDIN's Parthian shot has found its mark in the rapid-fire producer. There have been times when a single manager, czar of his producing staff, has had as many as six rehearsals on his hands and has spent twenty hours a day scorching from one to another in taxicabs, subsisting meanwhile upon lunch-counter coffee and sandwiches. Consider the plight of the artists thus periodically keelhauled. Scenes, sometimes whole acts, have to be rewritten overnight and memorized by the actors before the next day's rehearsal. The creative mood of the author is warped, his constructive skill distorted, his dialogue reduced from lifelikeness to stereotype banality. The actor, his memory plagued with trickily revised lines, is obliged to re-create the character he presents, revise his tempo and his climaxes. The best to be said of rapid-fire producing is that it is turned out by the yard, substituting the mechanical and the hackneyed for inspirational freshness and novelty. Too often the loom jams and tangles, to the loss of all concerned.

It is true that the product of this mill has sometimes a popular appeal, that American plays have very successfully invaded the London stage. It is true that we have individual producers deliberately artistic, and that numerous organizations devote themselves exclusively to sound and sincere endeavor. Unquestionably the dramatic tide is setting toward the shores of dramatic art, and with a volume and force unknown in England. But it is also true that we are as yet tyros in quality production. A large proportion of our most finished actors come to us from the London stage. A still larger proportion of the better sort of plays are written and shaped for production in England and on the Continent. Whatever hospitality Mr. MUNDIN may have received here is abundantly repaid by the attention he has bestowed upon the quick-on-the-trigger producer.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

It Leaves a Bad Impression.

If it be true, as our unregretted ex-Mayor and our not too much regretted ex-Commissioner of Police must have been told by their lawyers, that to make their getting a pension sure they had to resign a day before the expiration of their terms of office, then the manner and time of their submergence into ordinary citizenship give to the episode a somewhat unpleasant aspect.

Nobody greatly begrudges them the getting annually for the rest of their lives of a few thousand dollars from the public funds. The grudging is less in the case of Mr. ENRIGHT than in that of Mr. HYLAN, for the former, though he has had his critics, is credited by most New Yorkers with having displayed, in his many years of service as a policeman in all ranks from patrolman to the commissionership, a fair amount of professional knowledge and efficiency.

Moreover, Mr. ENRIGHT has been of late an earnest advocate of more coordination in police work and recording, both national and international, and to the furthering of that idea it is reported that he is to devote much of his attention hereafter. If he does that, he will perform a real public service and prove again his intelligent appreciation of how best society's warfare with the criminal classes can be waged.

It is perfectly evident, however, that whether or not either Mr. ENRIGHT or Mr. HYLAN should get a pension ought not to depend on such an utterly irrelevant consideration as one day more or less in office—on resignation a day before the expiration of term or waiting for that day to pass. That creates the impression that there has been some rather shabby scheming to utilize for private profit a petty legal technicality.

Presumably both men have been well advised as to the legal questions involved, but lawyers, like doctors, often disagree, and Mr. CRAIG still is to be heard from; and the matter is one likely to interest him a good deal as providing one more opportunity to give pain to Mr. HYLAN.

A Pension Viewed as Annuity.

To get a clearer understanding of what the granting to Mr. HYLAN of the pension he expects—$4,205 a year for life—really means, it should be regarded as by an actuary calculating the cost of an annuity. Americans do not go in for that form of insurance so much as they do in England. Whether the difference is due to a difference between American and English minds, or to the greater frequency, there, of need to make provision for people with some sort of claim to an income, but without much ability to handle and care for money, is a question that seems never to have received real study.

Be that as it may, a pension is in effect an annuity, even though no fixed sum has been set aside to pay it, and though there is in it no element of gambling, such as there is when, in effect, a bet is made as to how soon the receiver of the annuity will die. If he dies soon, the issuing company makes whatever is left of the amount paid; if he lives beyond his actuarial "expectation," the company loses, and though the life tables are accurate when they cover great numbers of people, having an annuity apparently strengthens the determination to live long.

At Mr. HYLAN's age his expectation of life as computed is between fifteen and sixteen years and an agreement with a good company to pay him $4,205 a year till he dies would cost him or anybody else $63,754.28. So that sum, in substance, is what Mr. HYLAN asks the city to give him, and the city does not have, as an insurance company would have, the chance of getting for nothing a larger or smaller part of the $63,754.28, though it does have the chance, as would the company, of paying the annuity long after the fifteen or sixteen years are past.

Mr. HYLAN has been in receipt of a salary of $25,000, with no such drains upon it as always come on the salary of a Governor or a President. He is still little more than middle-aged and doubtless will be able to capitalize for years to come the abilities with which his not innumerous friends credit him.

When Christmas Cards Were Invented.

General JOHN A. GUNN of Toronto, with the help of Miss MARJORIE SANKEY, a Canadian artist, has been looking up the history of Christmas cards as a means of sending out seasonal greetings of affection or friendship, and he has contributed to The Canadian Printer and Publisher, also of Toronto, the results of these investigations.

What is believed to be the first Christmas card, in the modern sense of the phrase, is now carefully preserved in the British Museum. The idea of manifesting good-will in this way seems to have come as something new to Sir HENRY COLE of the London Record Office in 1846, and he persuaded his friend J. C. HORSLEY, Royal Academician, to make the design. It is a sort of three-division picture, with three groups of happy people on it, gay with red, yellow and blue, and bears the inscription: "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to You." It would be regarded as decidedly crude nowadays, but a thousand copies of it were made and sent out.

The Christmas card habit, however, did not get a firm hold on the English until 1871, when one RAPHAEL TUCK took hold of the idea, caused many designs to be made, and began to pay for short poems to put on them. He secured the services of several eminent men, as well as those of many hack writers, and to the more famous writers he gave big fees. To TENNYSON he offered 1,000 guineas for a dozen verses, but the laureate was not tempted.

Since TUCK's day the manufacture of Christmas cards has become in many lands an industry almost deserving to be called important because of the money invested in it and the employment it provides. The cards meet a real need, and fill it better, probably, than anything else does. It is doubtful, however, if the receipt of one ever gives anybody much of a thrill, except when it comes in place of an expected present, and then the thrill is one of disappointment mixed with resentment. They clutter up desks or tables for a few days, and then they are thrown away, by most persons.

His Virtue a Kind of Deception.

A newspaper published up in White Plains appeared under a new owner and editor yesterday and proudly called attention to the fact that in the whole issue there was not a line devoted to crime. It is admitted, however, that when a crime has so much of news value in the town that it cannot be ignored it will be dealt with, but very briefly, and in a page far from the first.

Well, that is a plan that ought to earn the commendation of the small but articulate group of people who are wont to charge the press with giving a dreadful amount of attention to criminal news. They, however, seem always to be pretty well posted as to what is going on among the criminal classes, and they must get their information somewhere. Perhaps it is from the papers they condemn yet feel obliged to read.

This possibility is worthy of consideration by the White Plains editor—worthy, that is, if he values circulation and the resulting privilege of getting a good price for advertising.

Even he admits that crime may have legitimate news merit, but insists on presenting it in mere outline and few words. So doing, he will give his readers a one-sided, and therefore false, idea of the world and what is going on around them. Thus deceived, they will be in several dangers which, better informed, they might have escaped. And by sparing evil-doers the punishment of publicity he does them a service. They will not take his paper, however, and, with the virtuous and the vicious both gone, where will he be, with only a few unwise sentimentalists left?

He must know, and so must his laudators, that no decent paper "exploits" crime, and that it is next to impossible for any paper to make crime attractive. Its wage is the one announced long ago, and is it not well that the fact should be frequently illustrated by veracious accounts?

Solving Housing Problems.

As Chairman of the Housing Committee of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities it is extremely gratifying to me to know that the suggestions of the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects in regard to improvements in housing in our city are receiving sympathetic attention from the Mayor-elect.

Many of their contentions have all along been supported by our committee, and we shall be very glad to see early action, particularly in such matters as the outlawing of the shingle roof, more uniformity in the interpretation of provisions of the building code, stricter enforcement of the zoning law and a closer cooperation between city departments having to do with building construction. We look for much constructive results from the housing survey proposed by Mr. Walker and shall be glad to aid him in every possible way.

We want also to express our appreciation to the editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES for his able editorial supporting the proposal of the New York Tenement House Committee and our committee for an issue of special revenue bonds, to the extent of at least $160,000, in order to obtain a much needed increase in the number of sanitary inspectors in the Tenement House Department and bring this department up to working efficiency.

In our judgment, no single act of the new Administration would be productive of more good than this effort to clean up the tenements. Thus to insure the health and safety of the thousands of tenement dwellers, who have been suffering because of the inability of the department to cope with the violations on its books, would be a worthy first step in a much needed program of housing improvement.

KIPLING.

I.

He'll sing again who hymned them long ago;
And ancient lands, the cradle of his fame,

II.

Who tells us tales, makes music out of words,
Now harsh with truth, now tuneful as the birds,
Has won from Death; and men will not forget

A Proposal That Boyhood Place Be Secured for the Boy Scouts.

Your editorial in the Dec. 27 issue, entitled "The Boy Washington," forcibly calls attention to a matter of great and growing importance—the existence at Fredericksburg, Va., of the Pine Grove Farm, where Washington spent his childhood and youth, from the age of 4 until 19. It also points out the neglect under which this invaluable property, with all its wonderful historical treasures and Washingtoniana, is now languishing, and indicates the necessity of some action being taken to preserve and restore this spot, which should be a Mecca for all American patriots. Moreover, it mentions the plan of making Pine Grove Farm a national headquarters for the Boy Scouts of America.

This plan is one which appeals to me from more than a year's study of many of the factors involved. With a little development this estate could be made to serve a fine patriotic purpose; it could do much toward developing the physical health and moral integrity of American youth. The problem, just at present, is to find a donor who will make a gift of Pine Grove to the Scout organization. Such a gift would make the donor a national figure. It would put into the Scouts' hands a unique and the most valuable piece of historical ground in the United States still available for purchase. The value of this property, as Washington's 200th anniversary approaches, is bound to be tremendously enhanced. And there seems something peculiarly appropriate in having the boys of America own and maintain Washington's boyhood home. There as nowhere else lessons of Americanism could be taught.

In this idea I have received the enthusiastic support of Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook, Mrs. Alton B. Parker, Edwin Markham and others. Their letters of approval bear witness to their interest in the plan.

The Pine Grove or Washington Farm is an ideal place for Scout pilgrimages and encampments, as it occupies a central position between North and South. There boys of both sections could meet on common ground. The farm lies just half way between Richmond and Washington. At the farm the Rappahannock River is admirably suited to all water sports. The extensive plain near the river is ideal for tennis, football, baseball, hockey and aviation. Back from the river lie rolling hills and tracts perfect for golf, and still further back are 125 acres of fine forest land, with stands of red, white and Spanish oak, pine and hickory, admirable for the Scouts to camp in and learn woodcraft and forestry.

It would be difficult to find another place where so many natural advantages for boys are gathered together, and certainly impossible to find any such place so rich in inspiring historic values.

The farm comprises 460 acres, is well-watered and has about $75,000 worth of buildings and improvements. Much of it is under a high state of cultivation. There are orchards of various kinds of fruit trees, now bearing. Some 100 head of the finest Guernsey cattle are kept. The farm is located in the most productive region of Virginia, and is one of the finest estates in a section now being rapidly developed as a region of splendid country homes and Winter resorts. As a gift to the Scouts it would show a clear balance of income for the organization.

In connection with the bicentennial, a sixty-foot concrete road, the George Washington Memorial Road, is to be built from Washington City through the farm and on to Wakefield, where Washington was born. This road will be of immense value to the Scouts, making easily accessible for them all the points of interest in Washington's life as a boy and youth; also Mount Vernon, where his adult years were passed. The whole region about Fredericksburg is richer in historical values than any other in America, Colonial Revolutionary and Civil War history having been made there. No place in America could compare with Fredericksburg and Pine Grove Farm for teaching history and patriotism to the youth of America.

Here is a thing that must be done. The Boy Scouts of America should and must own, preserve and be inspired by the boyhood home of America's greatest boy—and man—George Washington!

ENCOURAGING RADICALS.

The Work of the League for Industrial Democracy.

In a time when almost all radicals are supposed to be tired, and labor generally is credited with being "drunk with prosperity," the League for Industrial Democracy has been having an interesting and suggestive experience.

It was originally established as the Intercollegiate Socialist Society. Among the signers of the call which brought it into existence were men of such diverse points of view as Jack London, Upton Sinclair, Clarence Darrow and Thomas Wentworth Higginson. For fifteen or sixteen years it confined its attention largely to work in the colleges, and today, after changing its name and somewhat broadening its scope, it is still an organization which specializes on work in the college world. For instance, its Field Secretary, Paul Blanchard, spoke in 101 colleges and universities all over the country last year.

Preliminary to our anniversary dinner, Dec. 30, we sent out letters to professors and former students who had known the work of the league and its predecessor and solicited frank comment on its work. We did not write merely to proved friends. Among others, we wrote to those whom we suspected to be tired radicals or knew not to be radical at all. Yet from this list we have had a surprisingly general agreement that, whatever the present views of the writers, the work of the league was in their experience and is now a tremendous and much needed factor in arousing the spirit of inquiry which is vital to all education.

Some of these letters, read at the dinner, will be embodied in a bulletin.

The point that I want to emphasize is that in this age of faith in the good Mr. Coolidge and the great Mr. Mellon there is a real and deep appreciation of the work of an organization which, however definite its own opinions, does not try to force creeds upon students, but to challenge their thinking. This is the note the league tries to strike both by the written and spoken word in its pamphlets as well as its lectures. That it has survived these twenty eventful years since 1905 and is still keeping up its work along the line I have described may be a matter of real interest to some of our readers. Even those who do not agree with me in hoping that we may discover a large crop of radicals among our college graduates in the next twenty years may find reason for congratulating a society which has so sturdily fought Babbitry in education.

MR. WILSON'S RECEPTIVITY.

Testimony From a Republican Official Under the War President.

I do not quite place Mr. George Hillard Benjamin, whose letter on Mr. Page's ambassadorial attributes you print today. Nor do I wish to enter at all into the current polemics as to whether Mr. Page represented America or Great Britain at the Court of St. James's. History will in its glacial custom apply the precise line of demarcation between Mr. Page's engaging qualities as a correspondent and his single-mindedness and fidelity as envoy overseas. Doubtless this distinguished spirit has less to fear from the comment of posterity than from the present concern of some of his friends.

But I should decidedly like to dwell on Mr. Benjamin's statement that "he [Mr. Page] failed, however, to appreciate that Mr. Wilson felt he knew it all and resented advice."

These coarse words as automatically disqualify Mr. Benjamin to speak in these matters as they make one certain that Mr. Page himself would have been the first to repel such special pleading in his behalf.

The statement, nevertheless, does go to a matter on which, in my opinion, a great deal of nonsense has been said and written, namely, that Mr. Wilson was averse to receiving advice on public matters.

Leaving aside reliable second-hand information, I can best cite my own experience. A Republican in politics, I held a post in Mr. Wilson's administration for thirty-seven months before, during and after the war that was certainly far inferior in rank and importance to that occupied by Mr. Page. Moreover, I was a comparative stranger to Mr. Wilson, washed up in Washington on the wave of a pioneer war-industrial survey for military purposes that a few sanguine business men had dared to make in the pregnant pre-war months.

Addressing the President from time to time only on what I believed to be timely and salient matters in the public business, almost wholly with relation to the war, I never, I think, failed to get a swift response that went squarely to the heart of the subject. Two such instances recall themselves sharply.

One afternoon, in a very critical hour of the war, I sent over to the White House by messenger a brief note advising the immediate establishment of a fact-gathering agency to collect and keep absolutely up to date a specific as well as panoramic record of all our official war work, military, naval, industrial and otherwise—in short, a current war conspectus, for which there was an almost tragic need for well-balanced war administration.

At half-past eight o'clock the next morning I had a letter from the President asking me to expand the idea to him. (It was, I may say, as much Secretary Lane's idea as my own). I did so immediately in writing. In a few days Mr. Wilson had set in motion the machinery that resulted in the extremely valuable Bureau of Planning and Statistics under Dean Gay of Harvard, supervised generally by Mr. Baruch as Chairman of the War Industries Board. Thus was brought together for the first time, and kept fresh, comprehensive data as to what our ever-ramifying war machine was producing or not producing.

Again, an intellectually costive and pessimistic situation had arisen within the Council of National Defense, composed at the top of six members of the Cabinet, which involved its whole future and bore intimately on the industrial conduct of the war, the War Industries Board being then still under the Council. It had to do as well with the needed continuance of the enormous transcontinental contact which the Council had created through its highly organized State, county, community and municipal councils of defense, and through various extremely useful boards and committees, part of its central mechanism in Washington. The situation was as uncomfortable as it was serious and grew from bad to worse.

Quite gratuitously, perhaps insubordinately, without saying anything to any one, fully prepared to lose my official head, I sent the President a very frank 1,500-word memorandum on this state of affairs, and with a certain detachment awaited the blast from the White House. This was in March, 1918. Within three days, if my memory holds, Mr. Wilson responded, in a two-page letter which I do not feel at liberty to quote. The reply was not only cordial but met the situation four-square and cured it. The details form another tale and will be told in time.

Now, at the risk of quite unduly italicizing my own official significance, I have set down two examples of Mr. Wilson's receptivity which on the whole I believe to be pretty typical of the manner in which he sat in the White House during the long months of the war and guided its almost overwhelming volume of action, related and unrelated, experimental and seasoned; here resolving policy, there unraveling purely administrative tangles, now dissecting with almost chemical accuracy the cost production figures of a great corporation still very keen about its dividends, wartime or no wartime (for Mr. Wilson gave far more attention personally to these basic war-industrial matters than the public as yet realizes), clearing in amazingly swift fashion what must have been the most burdened desk of the civilized world.

There is no need, however, to employ hyperbole in contemplating this historical figure. If, as has been loosely said, Mr. Wilson made war by memorandum, what matter? There may be as much wisdom in the written as in the spoken word, and there remains a record in the bargain. To just and generous minds, of whatever political belief or personal commitment, there should be but little dissent as to the tremendous war effort of Woodrow Wilson, once he got his country behind him. We should not let it slip from our minds in all of the sordid and sorry welter of thought that has made up the war's aftermath.

GROSVENOR CLARKSON,

Carelessness in Census Taking.

I have noticed in your columns the complaints as to the census of New York City, taken last Summer.

If the manner of taking the count was as careless in many instances as in that of my household, substantial discrepancies must have resulted. When the call was made at my home, 17 East Seventy-sixth Street, five of my family, with three servants, were out of town. I had left word that if the required form was left at the house it would be properly filled in; but the census taker did not comply with this suggestion and in consequence nine names were omitted in this particular instance.

FRANCES DAVISON WEDS WARD CHENEY

EDIFICE A FLORAL BOWER

LOCUST VALLEY, L. I., Jan. 1.—The picturesque little church of St. John's of Lattingtown was the scene of a notable New Year wedding this afternoon, when Miss Frances Davison, younger daughter of Mrs. Henry P. Davison and the late Mr. Davison, became the bride of Ward Cheney, son of Charles Cheney of South Manchester, Conn. The bride's father was a partner in J. P. Morgan & Co. and national head of the Red Cross during the war, while the Cheneys have long been identified with one of the largest silk industries of New England.

The Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, head master of the Groton School, at Groton, Conn., performed the ceremony, assisted by the Rev. Charles W. Hinton, rector of the tiny church at Lattingtown, which has been a shrine for North Shore society. Because of the small seating capacity of the church not more than 250 friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony. Afterward there was a reception at Peacock Point, the Davison home on the Sound shore, attended by a brilliant group of more than 1,000 guests who streamed through the house until late in the afternoon to greet the bridal party.

It was a colorful wedding, with its brightness only enhanced by the sombre gray skies and the bare trees outside the church. Inside, the little edifice had been transformed into a bower of yellow flowers and green leaves, with blooming acacia trees and yellow calla lilies blending with green sprigs of Southern laurel which arched the windows and hung from the walls. Except for small bunches of orchids on the altar, the front of the church was undecorated, so that the beautiful hand-carved panelings presented to the church by Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Morgan might be seen. In keeping with the small size of the church, the music was soft and subdued, being played on a harp, with the church organ as accompaniment.

The Bridal Party.

Miss Davison's bridal party included her sister, Mrs. Artemas L. Gates, as matron of honor; Miss Louise Sewall of Washington, D. C., as maid of honor, and eight attendants, including Mrs. F. Trubee Davison, Miss Barbara Cheney, Miss Maribel Cheney, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, Mrs. William Galey Lord, Miss Molly Bobcock, Miss Priscilla Murdock of Mill Neck, L. I., and Miss Mary Sallmon of Chula Vista, Cal., a niece of Mrs. Davison.

Wells Root of New York was Mr. Cheney's best man. The ushers included Langhorne Gibson, Robert F. Solley, Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, William Galey Lord, Artemas L. Gates and Robert Larner, all of New York; John Learned of South Manchester, Conn.; Reginald Porter Jr. of Boston, Briton Martin and Robert Whitner of Philadelphia, James S. Bush of Cleveland, Stanley Woodward of Washington, D. C.; Frederick de P. Townsend of Cambridge, Mass., and John Parsons of New Haven, Conn.

Two other attendants, all in white, attracted every one's attention as they walked sturdily up the centre aisle of the church. They were Frederick Trubee Davison Jr. and Endicott Peabody Davison, little nephews of the bride, who carried a white satin pillow on which the bride and bridegroom knelt during the ceremony.

Bride Walks With Her Brother.

The bride walked to the altar on the arm of her brother, Assemblyman F. Trubee Davison, and her mother gave her in marriage. She wore a beautiful gown of ivory white satin, which had been woven especially for her at one of the mills of the Cheney family. The gown, with slightly low neck, long sleeves and short skirt, had been embroidered with silver and pearls. A stately train of the same material was fastened to the gown at the waist, and was lined with flesh-colored satin. The veil Miss Davison wore was one of tulle and rare point lace, which had been worn by Mrs. Henry Pomeroy Davison, who is now in India, when as Miss Anne Stillman, she was married more than a year ago.

The gowns of the bridal attendants were of a delicate shade of apple-green chiffon velvet, which blended with the yellow and green decorations in the church. Their hats were of the same color, and they carried sprays of small yellow orchids. Mrs. Gates and Miss Sewall, matron and maid of honor, wore gowns of pale yellow chiffon velvet, with large tulle hats, and carried lavender orchids.

Immediately after the ceremony the bridal party and the guests at the ceremony motored over to the Davison home at Peacock Point, two miles away. Others had already begun to arrive for the reception, for which 3,000 invitations had been issued. In some cases hosts and hostesses at house parties brought their guests with them, and long before 5 o'clock the crowd was taxing the capacity of the house.

The bride and bridegroom received in the library, under a canopy of smilax and lilies-of-the-valley. Assisting them were Mrs. Davison and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cheney. Later the entire bridal party had supper at a horseshoe-shaped table in the dining room, which had been hung with graceful chains of smilax, while lilies-of-the-valley decorated the table. It was more than an hour before the last of the long line had passed those in the receiving group, and the space could be cleared for dancing.

Among the Guests.

Among the guests at the church ceremony and the reception were the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Mary Trubee; Mr. and Mrs. John W. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Lamont, Mr. and Mrs. Gates W. McGarrah, Mr. and Mrs. Junius Spencer Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Low, Mr. and Mrs. Langhorne Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Barklie McKee Henry, Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shipman Payson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Baker Jr., Mrs. August Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Blodget, Mr. and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Major Gen. Robert Lee Bullard, Mr. and Mrs. William D. Guthrie, Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. George Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Havemeyer, Mr. and Mrs. David Dows, Miss Sheila Burden, Mr. and Mrs. Crowell Hadden, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Pennoyer, Mr. and Mrs. Albert C. Wiggin, Mr. and Mrs. Francis L. Hine, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Blodget, Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Davison, Mr. and Mrs. William Kinnicutt Draper.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Daniel E. Pomeroy, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cheney, Mr. and Mrs. Austin Cheney, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Cheney, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Cheney, Mr. and Mrs. William Cheney, Colonel and Mrs. Sherwood Cheney, Mr. and Mrs. H. Bushnell Cheney, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Cheney Jr. and Mr. and Mrs. Howell Cheney.

Among the hundreds of messages of congratulation received by the bride was one from the Queen of the Belgians, who was a guest at the Davison home when she and King Albert visited the United States in 1919.

At midnight the bridegroom and bride, accompanied by Mrs. Davison, sailed on the Homeric for a two months' honeymoon in Europe. They are planning to visit Paris, St. Moritz and the Riviera. Mrs. Davison will go to Mentone, South of France, to stop with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Anatole Le Braz until her son, H. P. Davison, returns from India in the Spring.

Thess., 4:13-18—13. But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. 14. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 15. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. 16. For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. 17. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. 18. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

SEES TRADE GAINS IN LOCARNO DEALS

SCORES MONOPOLY PRICES

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—A prediction that the Locarno treaties would have the effect of opening up an era of stability in Europe, which would increase purchasing power and further benefit the export business of the United States, was made today by Dr. Julius Klein, Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. He pictured the foreign trade of this country as in a highly satisfactory condition, and expressed the view that the prospects for the new year were "altogether favorable."

A portion of the survey was devoted to a discussion of the actions of foreign monopolies in increasing the prices of certain commodities, such as rubber and coffee. This program was carried out to such an extent, Dr. Klein said, that it contributed to a material reduction of the favorable trade balance which has been enjoyed by the United States, and he felt that the "question of measures to combat these exactions deserves prompt and earnest consideration." The trade balance fell off one-third as compared with 1924.

Our Export Trade Gains.

Dr. Klein said that during 1925 the export trade of the United States continued its steady advance, exceeding by more than 7 per cent. its value in 1924. The total value of American exports for the year, he said, was in the neighborhood of $4,900,000,000, the largest figure since 1920, and representing an increase largely due to increased volume rather than to higher prices.

British exports of domestic products were slightly less than in 1924 and French exports also showed a decline. Those of Germany, because of the reestablishment of her currency and partial settlement of internal complications, showed an increase of about 6 per cent.

After allowing for the changing prices, British exports, said Dr. Klein, were only about three-fourths as great as before the war and German exports a little more than one-half as great, while French exports have increased slightly. Those of the United States show an increase in volume of 20 per cent.

"It is particularly a matter for comment," said Dr. Klein, "that our exports of finished manufactures have again risen markedly. Almost every class of manufactured articles has been exported in greater quantity than ever before, except in the inflation years, 1919 and 1920. A truly remarkable achievement of American industry is its increase of nearly 60 per cent. over 1924 in the number of automobiles exported, raising the automobile to a rank in our export trade surpassed only by cotton and mineral oils."

New placements of American capital in foreign countries during 1925 probably totaled more than $1,000,000, bringing our foreign investments, exclusive of loans by the Government, to more than $9,000,000,000, as compared with $2,000,000,000 before the war.

These investments, it was said, represented savings of the American people and additions to their wealth, supplying a future increase of national income in the form of interest and dividends from such investments, as well as a most potent stimulus to our exports.

Hits Foreign Monopolies.

Turning to imports, the total value of which increased about 17 per cent. in 1925, Dr. Klein discussed at some length the problem of foreign-controlled monopolies in rubber, coffee and other basic commodities.

"While this increase," he said, "reflects the greater prosperity of the country, with enhanced buying power for tropical and semi-tropical foodstuffs and exotic raw materials, it is unfortunately attributable also in considerable part to market advances in the prices of a number of important articles, such as rubber, coffee, tin, wool and hides and skins, and some of these increases in turn are due to indefensible artificial restrictions directed against the consumers of the United States.

"The most striking phenomenon in our import trade of 1925 has been the great advance in the price of rubber, raising it, as in all probability the final figures will show, to first place among our imports.

"For the first ten months the quantity of rubber imported increased by 19 per cent. over the corresponding period of 1924, but the value increased 121 per cent. During recent months the average import price has been much more than double that for the corresponding months of 1924. Had rubber remained unchanged in price, the total value of our imports would have increased but 11 per cent. instead of 17 per cent. This immense rise in the price of rubber has been at least in part due to artificial restrictions, the serious character of which Secretary Hoover has recently called to the general attention of the public.

"Another considerable fraction of the increase in value of imports has been due to the higher price of coffee. While the quantity imported has been one-eighth less than in 1924, the value has been about one-sixth greater, indicating an increase of about one-third in price. This rise is largely attributable to artificial control.

"There was also a marked advance in the average prices of other major import items—wool, tin, petroleum, burlaps and hides and skins. These various increases were only in part offset by certain price declines, the most noteworthy of which was the fall of more than 35 per cent. in the price of sugar, bringing that item down from first to fourth rank among our imports.

"Among the five great classes of imports, the only one to show a decrease in 1925 was manufactured foodstuffs, and this was wholly attributable to the lower price of sugar."

MAN ADRIFT AT SEA, SAVED.

Three Ships Mistake His Appeal for Help as New Year Greeting.

As Bengt Bengtson, 28 years old, of 305 Vanderbilt Avenue, Clifton, S. I., drifted helplessly out through the Narrows in his disabled motor launch K-12807 yesterday he waved to passing steamers for help. The only answer he got from them was the captain's voice in the megaphone:

"Same to you and many of them."

That is the story he told his rescuer, Boatswain Charles Christiansen of the Coast Guard cutter Raritan, who threw a line to Bengtson after the Morgan Line freighter El Cid had picked up the drifting man's signal for help.

Bengtson was towed into Rosebank. He said his boat came loose from its moorings while he was trying to repair the motor.

UNTERMYER TO JOIN PHONE RATE FIGHT

Will Serve as Counsel if House Begins Inquiry Into the American Company.

OPPOSES NEW SURCHARGE

He Declares Investigation Must Be Nation-Wide, Not Limited to the New York Company.

If a committee of the House of Representatives is designated to begin an inquiry into the methods and rewards of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the corporation that controls the telephone service in this city and in other large centres, Samuel Untermyer will serve the committee as one of its counsel. In making this announcement Mr. Untermyer asserted that while the agitation over telephones in this State was due to the recent demand of the New York Telephone Company for an additional surcharge of 25 per cent., any inquiry, to be effective, must include the American Company.

A request for Mr. Untermyer's services came from Paul Simon, a member of the Executive Committee and Governing Board of the City Parliament of Community Councils. Mr. Untermyer said that while he was willing to serve as counsel, the inquiry would have to be adequately financed, and it would have to be nation-wide and not only directed against the telephone company in this city, which is merely the creature of the American concern.

In his reply Mr. Untermyer said that this abuse was only one of many inflicted upon the public by the telephone company, that he did not think it was justified by law, and that he would bring the matter to the attention of the Public Service Commission, which as now constituted, "is little more than a rubber stamp for the various public utility corporations that are having a fine time fleecing the people. Unfortunately, however, it is impossible for me to take up the championship of all these issues."

Mr. Untermyer suggested that Chambers of Commerce, trade associations, community councils and other bodies should cooperate, so that any inquiry should be able to cope with "the most powerful corporation in the land, with hidden friends and lobbies in almost every corner of the Capitol, and J. P. Morgan & Co. as its sponsor."

Asked last night if he would comment on the assertion of Mr. Untermyer that the Public Service Commission was little more than a rubber stamp for the public utility corporations, William A. Prendergast, Chairman of the commission, replied:

"I am not interested in the slightest degree in anything Mr. Untermyer says on any subject."

There are several resolutions pending in the House of Representatives calling for an inquiry into the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and more are expected.

One attorney said that a special point would be made of the claim of the company that it is entitled to a return on "going value". It was said that in its argument before the Federal Court when the company received permission to add 10 per cent. to its rates, "going value" was fixed at about $17,000,000, and that in its present application the company sets the value at about $40,000,000.

WAGE WAR AGAINST PROFANITY ON STAGE

DEMANDS MORE REVERENCE

Fight to Continue Until "Abuse of the Name of Jesus Is Put Down," He Declares.

3,500 Attend Mass at Cathedral—New Year Services at the Episcopal Churches.

One hundred thousand members of the Archdiocean Holy Name Society of New York City will "wage war" against theatrical producers who permit the use of profanity on the stage, it was announced yesterday by the Rev. Eugene J. Callahan in a sermon at St. Patrick's Cathedral.

The sermon was delivered at the annual solemn high mass of the Holy Name Society and was attended by 3,500 men, who included delegates from the society branches in the 432 churches in the archdiocese.

Father Callahan, who is spiritual director of the Holy Name branch of St. Gregory's Church at 138 West Ninetieth Street, said that men who would not permit any one to insult the names of their mothers should not permit any one to insult the name of Jesus. He said substitutes for swearing were wrong, too, and that non-swearers who permitted others to swear in their presence without rebuking them were committing a sin.

"This morning on the Feast of the Holy Name," he continued, "it is most appropriate that we focus our attention solely on the name of Jesus, its use and abuse. As Holy Name men we repudiate blasphemy, cursing, perjury and bad language in general, but we hate most of all the abuse of the name of Jesus. He who holds the title Jesus in reverence, who knows its meaning—Saviour—will hardly fall into the other numerous sins of speech.

Holy Name Misused.

"Walk along the city streets, overhear snatches of conversation. How God's name is misused! In the place of business, in the home, in the presence of children, men, and women, too, abuse the name of Jesus. Men of faith and men of no faith can hardly speak ten words without calling down that sacred Name.

"There is a fearful campaign against the holy name that is not restricted merely to ordinary conversation.

"Have you attended the theatre lately? They come out night after night in cold blood and abuse the name of Jesus on the stage. For the cheap sensation of shock they insult thousands of playgoers, regardless of creed. 'Artistic profanity' they tell us, but I recognize no difference between this and the foul talk of the street. The playwright will say that this language is necessary for the realistic interpretation of character; but it is no more necessary than the infliction of real pain upon the actor who must register agony.

"The Holy Name Society stands squarely in opposition to the profane use of the name of Jesus. We have no quarrel with the theatre as such, but when the theatre degrades itself by profaning the sacred name it insults our God and we resent the insult. Any mark of disrespect shown to the names of our parents and friends, heroes, statesmen and public benefactors is indignantly resented, and to a greater degree do we resent the disrespect the theatre seems to have for the name of Jesus.

Says Abuse Must Stop.

"One hundred thousand men of New York have protested against this abuse of the holy name, but for the most part the producer and not the actor has turned a deaf ear to us. Priests have withstood them to the face, but their weak answer has been flippant and anonymous evasions. Today on the Feast of the Holy Name we tell the men in the theatre who are responsible for this abuse to stop it. As citizens of this State and members of the Holy Name Society, we will wage war until this abuse of the name of Jesus is put down."

Father Callahan announced that as the members of the Holy Name Society left the cathedral they would receive cardboard signs reading: "Please do not swear, nor use obscene language. In the interest of clean speech and common decency, please refrain from the objectionable use of profane and obscene language and expectorating in public places. Would you use such language in your home? Respect your fellow-man."

These cards, Father Callahan said, were furnished by A. S. Colbourne, President of the Anti-Profanity League. He asked those who received them to hang them in their offices and to hand small pink cards, on which a similar message was printed, to their acquaintances. Hundreds of the cards were taken.

Mgr. Michael J. Lavelle welcomed the members of the society and read to them a cablegram sent by Cardinal Hayes from Rome which said: "Most blessed and happy new year to you all."

In Episcopal Churches.

Most of the Episcopal churches had a celebration of the Holy Communion in the morning. At St. Thomas's Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street, the officiating clergyman was the Rev. Dr. Charles K. Gilbert, Secretary of the Episcopal Diocese of New York. He made a New Year's address.

In the Episcopal Church of the Holy Communion, Sixth Avenue and Twentieth Street, there was a festival service at 11 o'clock with music by the full choir. The Rev. Dr. Henry Mottet, the rector, gave a "watchword" for the New Year.

Among the other Episcopal churches which held special celebrations of the Holy Communion were St. Bartholomew's, Park Avenue and Fiftieth Street, the Rev. Dr. Robert Norwood, rector; St. James's, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street, and the St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Fulton Street, of which the Rev. Dr. Joseph P. McComas is the vicar.

Hospital Keeps Its Record, 13 Babies Born on Holiday

That a holiday is not a holiday unless thirteen babies are born is generally recognized at the Lying-In Hospital, Second Avenue and Seventeenth Street. And of these eight must be boys and five girls. On Christmas Day this was the record of births and yesterday, New Year's Day, the hospital reported a repetition.

At the New York Nursery and Child's Hospital, 161 West Sixty-first Street, six babies were born, half the number born on Christmas Day. Bellevue reported four births, three boys and one girl. Flower Hospital, 450 East Sixty-fourth Street, had two new little girls last night, and to keep the sex balance the Fifth Avenue Hospital at 105th Street and Fifth Avenue reported the birth of two male babies.

The distinction of being the first born in the city in 1926 is claimed for an eight-pound son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Lubaton, 1,953 Sixty-third Street, Brooklyn. He came into the world at 12:01 o'clock yesterday morning at the Williamsburg Maternity Hospital, 753 Bushwick Avenue, Brooklyn.

WOMAN DIES SUDDENLY IN THE PENNSYLVANIA

Miss Helen Sheehan, 26 years old, a daughter of Captain Michael Sheehan of the Jersey City Fire Department and living at 109 Bayview Avenue, Jersey City, died yesterday morning of heart disease in the Hotel Pennsylvania. Miss Sheehan, a stenographer employed in this city, with two women friends, engaged a room at the hotel to avoid traveling to their homes after celebrating New Year's Eve. During the night Miss Sheehan awakened one friend and said she was ill. The house physician prescribed for her, but her condition became worse and she died before an ambulance from New York Hospital arrived.

Miss Sheehan, it was learned, was one of a party of six, including three young men, which had a table in the hotel's grill. She complained shortly before midnight of feeling ill, and was taken to her room by the two other young women.

Medical Examiner Norris was told of the young woman's death by the police. He made an autopsy, but no report was issued on what was found.

Captain Sheehan said that his daughter had been suffering for more than a month with digestive disorders.

LEGION TO AID ORPHANS.

Will Care for Sick and Needy With $5,000,000 Endowment.

The American Legion in this State will take financial care of all veterans' orphans who are sick or in need, according to an announcement made yesterday by State Commander Harry C. Wilder and sent to the 1,000 posts of the Legion in New York.

"The American Legion feels itself responsible for these innocent sufferers of the World War and the public has aided us in the Endowment Campaign for $5,000,000 to take active care of the welfare of these children," he said.

C. W. A. Cannon of Richmond Hill has been appointed State Chairman of the Legion's Child Welfare Committee, and assisting him will be Dr. F. E. Fronczak, Board of Health, Buffalo; Mrs. D. J. Donovan of Rochester, representing the Legion Auxiliary, and Reginald Wood of Albany, representing the "40 and 8", a subsidiary of the Legion.

KILLED IN ROW OVER A DIME.

Man Who Asks for Money in a Restaurant Is Shot—Slayer Escapes.

An argument over a dime cost the life of Arthur Norton of 159 Troy Avenue, Brooklyn, early yesterday. He was shot by an unidentified man, a stranger to him, in the New Ideal Restaurant at 1,408 Bergen Street, Brooklyn.

Norton was sitting at a table and the stranger on a stool at the counter, according to the story told the police. When the man refused Norton's request for a dime the two started to argue and then to scuffle. The stranger pulled a pistol, fired twice quickly, and as Norton fell clutching his abdomen, the man ran outside and escaped. Norton was dead when an ambulance surgeon got there. Apparently he had been hit by only one bullet, but it penetrated his abdomen.

TO REPORT EMPLOYES' PAY.

24,000 Concerns Formed in 1925 Must Obey Income Tax Ruling.

All of the 24,000 corporations organized during 1925 must file with the State Income Tax Bureau reports of payments to employes before April 15, 1926, Director Thomas M. Lynch announced yesterday.

Reports of payments of $1,000 and more to single or married employes should be made on Forms 105 and 106, which can be obtained from the bureau at Alban, or district offices at 220 West Fortieth Street, New York City; 40 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, or at Utica, Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo.

Director Lynch explained that although the Federal law did not require reports from married persons receiving less than $2,500 a year the State law did, even though no tax was due when the wages were less than the exemption for married persons.

HIKED 3,020 MILES IN YEAR.

Yonkers Man, 70, Has Walked More Than 60,000 Miles in 20 Years.

As he started out on a New Year's hike yesterday James H. Hocking, 70-year-old pedestrian, who lives at 625 South Broadway, Yonkers, announced that during the year just closed he walked 3,020 miles as registered by his pedometer.

Since 1905, when he started the custom of walking on his birthday alone a mile for each year of his age, he has covered a distance equal to two and one-half times around the world. On his seventieth birthday a few weeks ago he walked seventy miles, from Yonkers to the Peekskill-Bear Mountain Hudson River Bridge and return.

Jail Plot Tale 'Press Agent Stunt.'

George Cutley of 123 Gifford Avenue, Jersey City, attorney for four Hudson County Jail prisoners said by officials to have been involved in a jail delivery plot, declared yesterday the story of the plot, declared yesterday to have been a "pure frustrated delivery to have been a "pure press agent stunt designed to glorify one or more officials." He said he would conduct an investigation.

Park Lane Corporation,
299 Park Avenue.
Dec. 31, 1925.

In seeking a way during the holiday season in which to contribute and alleviate the lot of some of the less fortunate, I came to the conclusion that this could best be done through charities fostered by the newspapers, as they were in the best position to distribute the funds.

The way in which THE NEW YORK TIMES has for some years handled its Hundred Neediest Cases appeals to me as a charity that should not be overlooked. Therefore, I ordered that the entire gross receipts of the new Florentine Room at Park Lane for Saturday, Dec. 26, be set aside and forwarded to you as our contribution to your Hundred Neediest Cases fund, and am forwarding you the attached check for all the moneys that were taken in on that day.

I take great pleasure in doing this and wish to congratulate THE NEW YORK TIMES for the great charity work it is doing and trust it will continue to do.

Yours very truly,
S. F. WEAVER, President.

ARLINGTON ACQUIRES THE HOTEL ANSONIA

Operator Takes a Lease From M. Glaser, Who Assumed Control From Bowman.

The Hotel Ansonia, occupying the entire block front between Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Streets and Broadway, has passed to the control of Edward Arlington from the Bowman-Biltmore chain, according to an announcement made yesterday, disclosing that M. Glaser had bought the majority stock of the Ansonia Company, operating managers, and assumed the lease formerly held by the Bowman interests. Mr. Glaser leased to Mr. Arlington. The lease runs until 1937. The Ansonia is said to have been acquired by Mr. Arlington at a gross rental of $4,385,000, exclusive of good-will and fixtures, which he also acquired for an additional purchase price of approximately $400,000.

The Hotel Ansonia is the fifth largest hotel in New York City. It has 1,218 rooms. In passing from the Bowman to the Arlington chain, it is the fifteenth hotel acquired by Mr. Arlington within the last fifteen years. Other hotels added by Mr. Arlington to his group includ the Claridge, Cadillac, Yates, Maryland, Harding, Flanders, Colonial Arms at Jamaica, and the Richmond.

The Bowman-Biltmore interests took over the Hotel Ansonia in 1917, and the management policy followed since then will be continued by the new operator, according to an announcement, showing that the Ansonia would have furnished and unfurnished apartments with hotel service.

GIVES MEMORIAL FOR SON.

Mrs. W. A. Higgins Has Tiffany Window Placed in Brooklyn Church.

A richly colored favrile glass window has been presented to the Central Congregational Church of Brooklyn by Mrs. William A. Higgins as a memorial to her son, William Ardiss Higgins Jr., who was killed in the war.

The window, which has for its subject "Thine, O Lord, Is the Victory," is made up of four rectangular openings, the outer panels of which carry out a landscape treatment, while the two centre panels show Christ blessing a Christian soldier who kneels before Him and offers Him the fruits of victory.

At the top is a deep blue scroll on which the words of the text are inscribed in letters of gold. The window was designed and made in the ecclesiastical department of the Tiffany Studios of this city.

MACKAY WATCHMAN HELD.

Police Believe Heiss Shot Friend on New Year's Eve Ride.

Special to The New York Times.

LYNBROOK, L. I., Jan. 1.—Adam Heiss, night watchman on the Clarence Mackay estate here, was held in $2,000 bail by Justice of the Peace Andrew Westervelt today, charged with assault on Robert Peel, line superintendent of the Long Island Lighting Company, who is in the Nassau County Hospital at Mineola with a bullet wound in his neck.

Detective Harry Wrightman, who arrested Heiss, said the latter and Peel were out together last night in Peel's automobile. Peel came home wounded at 5 A. M. He was taken to the hospital and later, the detective said, a pistol from which apparently three shots had recently been fired was found in Heiss's home. There were also, he said, powder marks on Heiss's coat.

Three Elephants Chased in Harlem Streets; Burst Into Police Station and Are Caught

"Carrie" and "Joe" and "Jeannie" had a New Year's revel last night in the streets of Harlem. They wound up in the West 123d Street Police Station. The desk lieutenant, however, let them off with a warning, for "Carrie" and "Joe" and "Jeannie" were three young elephants, and as one of the patrolmen in the back room said: "They probably didn't know it was against the law."

The three elephants were part of an animal act at Loew's Victoria Theatre on 125th Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, and about 8:30 o'clock, while they were in the wings waiting to go on, some scenery fell on them. The animals wheeled on their trainer, Samuel Wilkins, pushed him aside and darted out a rear double door to 126th Street and galloped east toward Seventh Avenue.

With a crowd of trainers and stage hands in pursuit, the elephants pounded along the pavement and when they reached Seventh Avenue they turned south. At the crowded corner of 125th Street Patrolman Philip Sultzer saw them and took a stand in the middle of the street with his hand raised. The trio ignored the traffic signal, plunged up on the sidewalk, around that patrolman and jumped back to the street.

Patrolman Joseph Holtmeyer was standing in front of the station house between Seventh and Eighth Avenues and when he caught a glimpse of the galloping beasts, he too ran to the middle of the street. The animals plunged toward him and lifted their heads as they saw his brass buttons shining in the glow from the two green lights in front of the station house.

Suddenly they paused. According to their trainers they thought the man with the brass buttons was a trainer and the green lights signified a theatre. Before the patrolman could approach them they darted past him to the sidewalk, nearly striking a young woman, mounted the station house steps and plunged through the plate glass doors.

Lieutenant George Renselaer had just booked several men for intoxication and when he heard the noise, he expected another turbulent group of prisoners. The elephants kept on going and got into the back room, where they disrupted ten games of dominoes among reserve policemen. There, exhausted, they ended their revel.

MANY AID FAMILY OF 7 SICK CHILDREN

With 5 in Hospital and 1 Ill at Home, Another of Michaelczuk Brood Is Stricken.

GET $40, FOOD AND CLOTHES

Mother Weeps Most of Day in Cold Tenement—Boy, 13, Now the Sole Wage-Earner.

Mrs. Sophie Michaelczuk, 41 years old, of 182 East Third Street, spent a sad New Year's Day. With five of her eight children in Bellevue Hospital suffering from pneumonia and another ill at home, a seventh child, Stephen, 11 years old, was stricken yesterday with bronchial pneumonia.

Although the mother's burden was lightened considerably yesterday by neighbors and strangers who gave food, clothing and money, she remained inconsolable over the serious illness of her children and wept and moaned most of the day.

At about noon she received a message from Bellevue informing her of the serious condition of her son John, 17, and urging her to come at once. While neighbor women took charge of the three-room flat on the second floor of the tenement, she hurried to the hospital to visit her children.

Keeps Stephen at Home.

Meantime, Stephen at home developed a high temperature and a physician was called. He pronounced the boy's case as bronchial pneumonia, and said he should be taken to the hospital. But the mother, on her return, would not hear of her youngest son being sent to the hospital and pleaded so hard that Stephen was kept at home in charge of a visiting nurse. Pauline, 6 years old, also is sick in bed in the home.

Mrs. Michaelczuk and her family came to Third Street several months ago from Middlegrove, Saratoga County, N. Y., where she had gone two years before with her husband, George, when he became ill and the doctor advised a higher altitude. The husband bought a small farm for $200, but it did not pay, and he finally became so ill he could do no work.

The mother, after finding a place there for her husband, brought her family back to New York. With two sons old enough to earn about $13 each a week and with the piece work she obtained from an umbrella factory, she was able to maintain her home until about a week ago when one by one the children became ill.

She has not heard from her husband for more than a month, and that worried Mrs. Michaelczuk, too. She fears that perhaps he has become too ill to write to her.

Charity knocked at the door all through the day, and about $40 was received in cash and checks. Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Neth of Jamaica, L. I., sent a check for $25. Others called in automobiles and left quilts. Winter wraps and eggs, milk and butter for the destitute family. Many contributions were made anonymously.

Nurse Offers Services.

Mrs. Sophia Cohen of 973 Whitlock Avenue, the Bronx, a trained nurse, visited the mother and offered her assistance, which was accepted. It was Mrs. Cohen who realized that the boy Stephen was seriously ill, and she called in Dr. G. Astrachan of 60 Avenue D.

An unsuccessful attempt was made late in the day to get a nurse to take the place of Mrs. Cohen, who had to return to her own patients in the Bronx. It being a holiday there were no visiting nurses available at the city institutions where application for help was made.

Stephen and his young sister, Pauline, are lying in the main room of the flat, which serves as kitchen as well as dining room, and the only heat comes from a kitchen stove. The flat underneath is unoccupied, so that the floor is cold, and when the hall door is opened there is a chilling draught from outside.

The fact that the eight children occupied two beds and there was no heat during the intense cold of last Sunday is said to have made them all ill of the same disease.

Joseph, 11, is now the sole wage-earner of the family. He is an electrician's helper and earns about $13 a week. John, his elder brother, earned $13 a week as a messenger.

The children in the hospital are Tessie, 3 years old; Mary, 5; Sophie, 9; Annie, 13, and John.

Salvation Army Gives Dinner in Hotel on the Bowery.

Five hundred turkey dinners were given away yesterday by the Salvation Army at the Memorial Hotel, 225 Bowery, in accordance with the New Year's custom observed for several years. Brigadier Wallace Winchell, who is in charge of the hotel, said that tickets were given to 240 of the 612 regular patrons and the remainder to other applicants. Early in the forenoon the crowd of ticket-holders gathered in the big hall, which was filled by 12 o'clock, when the first 125 were served.

The menu consisted of barley soup, celery, turkey, potatoes, turnips, dressing, cranberry sauce, pie and coffee, with a generous portion of each.

WOLFHOUND KILLED IN CHASE ON 44TH ST.

WOMAN HIT BY BULLET

Button Stops It and She Is Unhurt—Pursuit in Taxis Extends From Tenth to Sixth Avenue.

Shots rang out on Forty-fourth Street yesterday as two policemen and several hundred civilians pursued a white wolfhound that had reverted to type. Nearly a dozen shots were fired before the dog was killed.

One bullet, fired as the dog raced ahead of the crowd between Seventh and Sixth Avenues, struck the sidewalk in front of the Hotel Langwell, ricocheted and endangered a woman walking down the hotel steps. She had a narrow escape from injury, for the bullet passed through the outer part of her fur coat and was stopped by a large button on the inner side of the lining. Another bullet went through the window of a drug store at Sixth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, where the chase ended.

The excitement started about 2:30 o'clock, when Patrolman George Ward of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, on duty at Eleventh Avenue and Forty-fifth Street, received a call from John Sommers, employed in an undertaking parlor at 547 Tenth Avenue, that the wolfhound was racing around the streets snapping at pedestrians. The patrolman hailed a taxicab and as he drove up to Forty-fourth Street and Tenth Avenue he saw the dog run east.

Standing on the running board of the taxicab which set out in pursuit, the patrolman fired at the wolfhound. The animal kept on, running across Ninth and Eighth Avenues, straight toward Longacre Square. The sound of shots caused many to join the chase, and a hue and cry arose.

As the animal ran through the heavy traffic in Longacre Square and into the Forty-fourth Street block, between Seventh and Sixth Avenues, still leading the chase, Traffic Patrolman Thomas MacMahon on duty in the Square took another taxicab, and jumping on the running board with his pistol in hand, joined Patrolman Ward in the pursuit.

The patrolmen fired five shots. Two bullets took effect, but failed to drop the animal.

Miss Magdalene Brade, said to be a pianist, who was a guest at the Hotel Langwell, came out just as the dog went by. A moment later she heard a bullet strike the sidewalk and felt a sharp jolt as it struck a button on her coat.

The two patrolmen caught up with the dog at Sixth Avenue and, as it ran toward the drug store of Moech & Co. on the northeast corner, one fired again. The bullet missed and made a neat hole in the plate glass window of the store. No one was hurt by it.

The dog, badly wounded, crept into the doorway of a store next door, where a minute later Patrolman MacMahon killed it.

WANDELL HEADS GALLERY.

Succeeds Mrs. Clarke at Art Rooms Founded 120 Years Ago.

The keys of the Clarke Art Galleries, Inc., at 42 East Fifty-eighth Street, were turned over yesterday by Mrs. Celia L. Clarke to Frederick H. Wandell, who became the new general manager and auctioneer. The business has been managed by three generations of Clarkes since it was founded 120 years ago. Since the death two years ago of Augustus W. Clarke, his widow has been the manager.

Mr. Wandell has been connected with the Plaza Art Rooms, at 5 East Fifty-ninth Street, and says Augustus W. Clarke "broke him in." David W. Kahn, with offices at 120 Broadway, was the attorney.

Mrs. Clarke will leave shortly for a cruise on the Rotterdam, it was said yesterday.

STRIFE SPLITS KLAN OF ULSTER COUNTY

BLAME FIGHTING KLEAGLE

They Say They Were Collared and Trounced When They Tried to Debate at Meetings.

Special to The New York Times.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Jan. 1.—The boasted 15,000 membership of the Ku Klux Klan of Ulster County is split by factional strife. The "rebels," particularly in Ulster Park, Highland, Milton, Marlborough and Wallkill, are reported flocking to a rival organization of Indiana origin. The new contender calls itself the "Independent Klan of America," or the "Minute Men."

A "pistol-toting" Kleagle, whose favorite oratorical gesture was a disquieting patting of his bulging holster, the insurgents say, has passed on to Allegany County. They blame him for a schism among Klansmen and Kamelias which, they say, can never be composed. A mysterious "Fighting Bob" has come to take his place. So far the set of the newcomer's jaw is not familiar to Broadway, the Rondout Creek waterfront and the hinterland, but his sobriquet is not deemed promising.

Local Politicians Disturbed.

The county politicians are frankly at sea. So long as there was only one Klan, according to court house gossip on "the Hill," they could secretly pledge membership or support with a "gentlemen's agreement" on the side that they could publicly disown it and no harm done. Now both Klans are bidding for them. The more sincere vote-getters see that indiscreet alignment either way will lead to exposure by the offended faction. Local politics are said to be getting a shade demoralized.

As to the merits of the controversy only the junior side is being heard openly. The old Klan is known to have enjoined even greater secrecy than ever. The "Minute Men" say that the row grew out of the summary treatment some of them received as members of the original fraternity of the Hood and Robe. When they presumed to debate at "unit" meetings they were collared, lifted from chairs and trounced, or else were pronounced "suspended" where they stood. Those who offered support were as promptly "suspended" too. In one case the "suspended" had demanded to know why the local ruler had not kept an appointment at which certain financial matters were to have been discussed. The ruler in question later explained he had not gone to meet the man "for fear I would have to shoot him," it was said.

Allege "Strong-Arm" Work.

The insurgents say that during the Klan's membership drive, which began last March, recruits came in at as high as 900 a week. The efficiency of the organization work, however, they say, was marred by too much "strong-arm" work at meetings, and the storm finally broke at Ulster Park about election time. The Kleagle was defied and the charter of the Ulster Park "unit" was suspended.

The "unit" continued to hold meetings in the Odd Fellows Hall near the West Shore Railroad Station, and finally set Nov. 1 to vote whether to join the Independent Klan of America. In the midst of the session, the insurgents say, the Kleagle appeared with thirty loyalists, and took possession in the name of the old Klan. The insurgents evacuated, one of their number complaining he had received a gavel upon the head as he was nearing the door.

The insurgents appealed to the Odd Fellows as landlords to turn the Kleagle out. Failing that, they waited until he had adjourned and then resumed their meeting, at which they formally pledged allegiance to the Independent Klan of America. The movement spread to the other communities, a national organizer of the "Minute Men" was brought in, and the rival proselytizing is reported on with unprecedented vigor.

The insurgents say they are admitting members from the old Klan without requiring another $10 initiation fee. They complain that $3 of each $10 goes as commission to the Kleagle, under the Klan constitution. The balance goes to the State and national treasuries. Another $5 is charged, they say, for the hood and robe, and this goes to Atlanta, Ga. Hoods and robes are made there, they say, and members are expressly forbidden to make their own. All hoods and robes are collected after meetings and kept by a special custodian. The local Klan, however, is allowed to keep the $5 annual membership dues.

The insurgents figure that, if the Klan's claim of a 15,000 membership is correct, Ulster County Klansmen and Kamelias paid $225,000 to the organization of which they received no immediate benefit—$150,000 in initiation fees and $75,000 in vestments.

LADY ASTOR ON NEW YEAR.

Nothing New, She Says, but the Word of Christ Still Stands.

LONDON, Jan. 1 (AP).—A characteristic New Year comment was made today by Lady Astor, the former Nancy Langhorne of Virginia.

"There is nothing new to say, and there is nothing new to do," she remarked. "If the Christian nations would remember the message of Christ, 1926 should be a new year well worth while."

Policeman Shoots Comrade As They Hunt for 'Burglar'

A false alarm of a burglary in the home of Michael Venich at 355 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, last night resulted in the accidental shooting of Patrolman Frederick Beste of Traffic D by a fellow-patrolman. Beste was able to leave for his home after being treated for a scalp wound at the Caledonian Hospital.

When Venich heard noises on the ground floor of his home he ran to Parkside Avenue a block away and informed Patrolman Beste, who in turn summoned Patrolman Thomas O'Brien, also of Traffic D on duty another block away. As the two patrolmen were stepping over a hedge around the Venich home with their pistols in hand, O'Brien's foot caught in a wire. He stumbled and his pistol went off, the bullet grazing Beste's forehead. The "burglar" was discovered to be a relative of Venich who was paying an unexpected visit.

HOLIDAY DRY AGENTS MADE NOT AN ARREST

A FEW PICKED UP AS DRUNK

Thirteen in Bellevue From Alcoholic Poisoning, Compared With Thirty Last Year.

In the cold light of the morning after, the records disclosed yesterday that although New York City had enjoyed one of the noisiest, gladdest, giddiest, most expensive and spirited New Year's celebration in its history, arrests for violations of law were so few that the authorities said a record had been established.

Whether the unmistakable "kick" that many thousands got out of the occasion was administered by the tiny foot of the new-born year, or by the stuff commonly called "pre-war" by its possessor and poison by United States Attorney Emory R. Buckner, the fact remains that Federal prohibition agents, 150 of whom were scattered through the centres of celebration, had reported no arrests up to the hour that pohibition headquarters at 1,107 Broadway closed its doors and called it a night.

Even the blind beggars of Broadway could not have failed to recognize that something unusual was afoot and that the jollity and generosity of the seemingly endless throngs were of a sort rare in the sober hours of daylight. Nor could the most unobservant of straphangers have failed to conclude, when animated voices were raised in song and story above the subway's roar at 3 and 4 A. M., that somewhere, somehow there must have been a tiny trickle through the dam of prohibition enforcement.

Despite Mr. Buckner's ominous reading of that section of the Volstead act relating to the possession of liquor as a violation of law, not one "hip flasker" was arrested on that charge. In some of the celebrative places the temper of the crowds was such that an arrest for violation of the liquor laws would have required both courage and physical competency. But it was learned yesterday that prohibition agents had been instructed to do nothing "unusual," and particularly to avoid any "rough stuff." They were told to make arrests for the sale of liquor only.

Night Court reported only five arrests for intoxication, West Side Court reported only one, and Essex Market Court's records showed no arrest on that charge.

At Bellevue Hospital, where only thirteen persons were taken as a result of alcoholic poisoning, physicians said better liquor must have found its way into the market this year, as there had been thirty cases of alcoholic poison reported there during the celebration of the previous New Year.

These physicians said that, apparently, wood alcohol was entirely off the beverage market, and chemists had helped the bootleggers to rob denatured alcohol of everything except its queer taste.

New Year's merrymaking, according to the want advertisements had its losses as well as gains. Among the articles reported lost in cabarets, hotels and theatres were vanity cases, purses, platinum bar pins, gold bracelets, pearls, wrist watches, a doctor's bag, spectacles, a lorgnette, walking sticks, reading glasses and a lady's bag containing clothing.

WANTS CHURCH TO DROP POLITICS AND DRY ISSUE

C. C. Johnson, Pittsburgh Educator, Blames Bryan for Its Stand on Absolute Prohibition.

Carman Cover Johnson, Pittsburgh educator and defeated Democratic nominee for Mayor of that city at the last election, said in an interview here last night that prohibition had no biblical warrant and that the Church, in advocating it, had stepped beyond the Bible and committed itself to a policy of arbitrary force.

Mr. Johnson declared the original intention of the Anti-Saloon League, in behalf of which he once delivered a number of addresses, was temperance and the abolition of the saloon and that it had exceeded its proper scope as a result of the influence of the late William Jennings Bryan, who, he asserted, was responsible for "the false position into which the Church has been driven."

Mr. Johnson said that, during a series of conferences among temperance leaders before the Eighteenth Amendment had even been suggested, Mr. Bryan's attitude in favor of absolute prohibition led to its preparation and subsequent enactment. He said he had heard some of the leaders in the building in Pittsburgh in which one of the conferences had been held, discuss "intimately" the position in favor of absolute prohibition taken and advocated by Mr. Bryan. Others of the temperance leaders, according to Mr. Johnson, declared at first that the churches could not take up the prohibition subject.

"Let the Church, as such," said Mr. Johnson, "pull out of politics and permit the legitimate, political parties to function normally under the Anglo-Saxon doctrines of party responsibility. There is no such thing as 'the Church vote' and there should not be. The sooner political parties recognize this fact and act accordingly, the better it will be for Church and party, State and country.

"Congress today is frightened by the so-called Church vote, the Ku Klux Klan vote and the 'Dry' vote. The Church should get out of the prohibition situation. Probably because of the false position in which the Church finds itself in politics, especially with respect to the liquor issue, the country will be denied the extraordinary executive services of the great Governor of the State of New York."

RHINE FLOOD TOPS MARK OF CENTURY

COLOGNE, Jan. 1.—Early this evening the Rhine had passed the high-water mark of 1920, the gauge registering 35 feet. It is more than a century since this mark has been reached. The river continues to rise at about two inches per hour.

The electric light plant has closed down, the waters having short-circuited the cables, and the entire city is in darkness. The old section of Cologne is entirely inundated, the muddy waters swirling through the narrow, crooked streets like a millrace.

Though elaborate preparations had been made for high water, the present level was not expected or planned for, and much damage has been done to goods which were believed beyond the reach of the waters.

In the submerged section the upper stories of houses are still occupied, the people going to their work and doing their shopping in boats specially provided for the flood seasons.

Estimates of damages along the Rhine and Moselle run into millions of dollars, with Cologne bearing losses amounting to at least $7,000,000.

The Prussian Government has placed 500,000 marks at the disposal of the Rhineland for food and shelter for the flood refugees. Fifty thousand persons have been driven from their homes in the Rhine and Moselle districts alone.

COBLENZ, Germany, Jan. 1 (AP).—The Rhine River here was higher today than at any time since the floods of 1784. The high-water mark is 9.30 meters (about 30 feet) above normal.

French Rivers Receding.

PARIS, Jan. 1 (AP).—The rivers in the south and east of France are receding, but those in the northwest continue to rise. The weather is improving, and this fact lends hope that France may be spared the calamity which is ushering in the new year in Belgium.

In the little kingdom much damage already has been done, and the rivers continue to rise. Liege has suffered badly in the lower part of the city, and in its environs a crevasse occurred on the right bank of the Meuse, flooding to a depth of twelve feet the entire district of Seraing.

The authorities in Paris, although they have begun precautionary measures, insist that the capital will escape damage by the floods. They forecast that the Seine will continue to rise until Tuesday, but that the water will not reach a high enough level to make it dangerous to the city. The suburbanites, however, seem destined to suffer their annual visitation by the waters. Outside Paris the most badly stricken regions up to the present appear to be the historic cities Beauvais and Caen.

In some parts of these cities the water is six feet deep in the streets. Factories in the suburbs have closed down and the villages in which they are situated are cut off from the rest of the world.

NICE, Jah. 1.—Burglars entered the palatial flat of Mrs. Osbourne in the Palais des Orangers, near the Promenade des Anglais, here last night while she was completing her New Year shopping, and stole 250,000 francs in banknotes and 500,000 francs worth of jewelry, which were in a valise hidden under the table.

All the servants were absent at the time the thieves entered by placing a ladder from a window of a neighboring house at the sixth story on a level with Mrs. Osbourne's flat.

NICE, France, Jan. 1 (AP)—Mrs. George Osbourne, an American, who was Miss Helen Mason, and has been established at Nice six years, says she intended to purchase a piece of property, withdrew the necessary funds and concealed them.

After she had been away from her home yesterday she saw the door was open and, rushing to the hiding place, found the money had disappeared, together with the jewels.

WASHINGTON BEATEN BY ALABAMA, 20-19

50,000 See 3 Touchdowns in Third Quarter Win for the South in Pasadena.

AERIAL ATTACK DECISIVE

WILSON PLAYS GREAT GAME

But Coast Team Fails to Hold 12-0 Lead When Star Is Forced Out With Injuries.

PASADENA, Cal., Jan. 1 (AP).—University of Alabama's football team passed and rushed to triumph here today against the University of Washington Huskies and wrote the South's first gridiron history in the Far West all over the New Year's Day classic in Rose Bowl. The score was 20 to 19. A crowd of about 50,000 witnessed the game.

George Wilson, Washington's great halfback and its tower of strength, crashed near the end of the second period, and with him went the Husky hopes as he was taken injured from the field. He came back in the last quarter, but too late.

The Tuscaloosa team had seen and seized its opportunity. Under the brilliant field generalship of Pooley Hubert, the lads from Dixie crowded enough scoring into a small portion of the third period to carry off the game. With the reckless abandon of an almost forlorn hope they cut the Husky defense to ribbons with a dazzling succession of passes, runs and bucks.

Johnny Mack Brown led the attack as the Southerners hustled the ball across the Purple line thrice in rapid sequence and twice Buckler added the extra point. On the third he failed to clear the bar.

The Crimson tide came out of the South, reputed as a team of tremendous passing. It made good and more. Pooley Hubert threw one of 65 yards that paved the way for Alabama's second score and in doing it he wiped from the record books the great heave by Brick Muller of 57 yards, made back in 1921 when the Bears beat Ohio State. From that point the Husky defense crumpled and the Crimson attack gained speed.

Guttormsen Kicks Off.

Guttormsen kicked off for Washington and Mack Brown ran the ball back to the 30-yard line. Then Brown toured right end for Alabama for 15 yards. On the next play he got a yard and a half. The Crimson continued its rush, a pass, Hubert to Gilles, netting 29 yards when the Alabama half snached the ball from the air under the nose of a Washington defender. Hubert took the ball through centre 9 yards toward the Huskies' 17-yard streamer.

Pooley Hubert's wide pass was grounded and Pooley then hit the line for two yards and first down on the Purple 15-yard line. Mack Brown was thrown for a two-yard loss. Barnes ran the ball out of bounds for a one-yard gain.

Elmer Tesreau smashed through and dropped Mack Brown for an eight-yard loss. George Wilson speared Winslett's pass and carried it back to the Washington 45-yard line.

Guttormsen slammed right tackle for nine yards. George Wilson split right tackle for eleven yards. Patton hit centre for 2 yards and Wilson left guard for 3. Wilson passed but it was incomplete. Wilson made his next pass good to Guttormsen, who raced out of bounds on the Crimson 15-yard line.

Patton pierced centre for 2 yards. Captain Tesreau made 3 through the same hole on a delayed buck. Wilson fought his way around left end to the one-yard line. Patton went over for a touchdown. Guttormsen's kick for the extra point went wide and the score was 6—0 in favor of Washington.

Gillis made six yards through centre and Mack Brown went out of bounds for a one-yard loss. Gillis punted outside at Washington's 42-yard line. George Wilson went three yards through right tackle. Tesreau was stopped with no gain, but George Wilson ran 33 yards after smashing the Alabama secondary defense. On the next play he passed to Cole and the latter made a touchdown. Guttormsen hit the cross bar with his kick and lost the extra point. The score now was Washington 12, Alabama 0.

Wilson Again Hurt.

George Wilson hit right tackle for 2 yards. Then he shot a pass to Guttormsen for an 8-yard gain. He tried Alabama's left end, but failed to gain and was injured again. The big Washington halfback had to be carried off the field, and Louis Tesreau, brother of the Husky captain, took his place.

Hubert got away for a 26-yard run to the Washington 15-yard line. Pooley thrust again through centre and Guttormsen stopped him at the 5-yard mark. Hubert added another 2 at centre. Alabama huddled for conference. Hubert, again carrying the ball, made another yard over left guard and on the next play Hubert went through centre for a touchdown. Buckler kicked goal, making the score: Washington, 12; Alabama, 7. The crowd here gave the Southerners a tremendous ovation.

Jones kicked off for Alabama and Washington ran it back 20 yards. Elmer Tesreau passed to Guttormsen for a 6-yard gain. Louis Tesreau punted and Mack Brown ran back 7 yards to his own 22-yard line. Washington was missing the injured George Wilson, who watched the play from the bench. Barnes of Alabama made 17 yards on three plunges and Mack Brown made 2.

Then came the climax, a pass, Hubert to Mack Brown, of 65 yards and a touchdown. Buckler kicked the extra point and the score stood: Alabama, 14; Washington, 12.

Jones kicked off to Louis Tesreau, who was thrown on his own 35-yard line. Louis fumbled a bad pass and Alabama grabbed the ball. Hubert sent another long pass to Mack Brown, who raced to another touchdown. Buckler failed to kick goal and the score was 20 to 12 with Alabama leading. Hubert was on his 40-yard line when he threw the ball and Brown caught it as he was crossing the line beneath the goal cross-bar.

H. Brix replaced E. Wilson at Washington's left tackle and Jones kicked off to Cutting, who ran it back to his own 34-yard line. Patton ran out of bounds after a 2-yard gain. Louis Tesreau tossed one to Patton which netted a 6-yard gain. Louis Tesreau failed on an attempted pass to Guttormsen and Hubert shoved Patton back for a yard loss. The period closed with the score: Alabama, 20; Washington, 12.

The biggest Husky of them all, George Wilson, came back to the game and a wild Washington roar split the air. Johnson made 3 yards and Hubert slid off left tackle to the Northwesterner's 13-yard mark. Hubert failed by an inch to make it first down on the 12-yard mark and next tried to pass, but Washington took the ball.

George Wilson went 18 yards around left end. His attempted pass was incomplete. Patton made 29 yards around right end. Wilson split left tackle for 3 yards to the Alabama 37-yard mark, then passed to Guttormsen for a first down on the 31-yard line. Wilson hit centre for 4 yards, then shot a long low pass to Guttormsen, who went to a touchdown. Cook made the extra point. This made the score: Alabama 20, Washington 19.

Both Resort to Forwards.

Hubert made 3 yards over left guard. The Husky line held Hubert to a lone yard. Guttormsen fumbled Gillis's punt, but the Washington quarter recovered on his own 9-yard line. Patton made 2 yards on two lunges. George Wilson then made a first down with a run off tackle to his 22-yard mark. R. Thompson replaced E. Brix at Alabama's left guard.

Mack Brown and Gillis knocked down Wilson's long pass. Bowden replaced Perry at Tuscaloosa's right tackle. Another Wilson pass failed. Caldwell speared a third Wilson attempt on Washington's 35-yard line. The gun sounded and the Crimson tide had engulfed the Purple tornado, with the final score: Alabama 20, Washington 19.

Hubert's 65-Yard Pass Sets Football World's Record

A new record for football in the United States, and for that matter, in the world, was set yesterday when Hubert threw a forward pass sixty-five yards to Brown in the Alabama-Washington football game. The longest previous completed pass which resulted in a touchdown was made in 1924 when John Levi of the Haskell Indians tossed the ball sixty-two yards to George Kipp, who ran only five yards to tally.

STUHLDREHER SCORES IN FLORIDA BATTLE

His Sensational Touchdown Wins for Former Notre Dame Stars Over Ex-Tigers, 6-0.

CORAL GABLES, Fla., Jan. 1 (AP).—A sensational 85-yard drive in the final moments of play gave a football team composed of former Notre Dame stars a 6 to 0 victory here today over a team made up mostly of former Princeton players. The winners, exhibiting their famous "Four Horsemen," and a part of the 1924 championship outfit, battled against a strong squad, one of the players being Eddie Kaw, former Cornell All-American back.

Through three quarters the so-called Notre Dame team's backfield charged vainly against a superior Tiger line, with honors a shade in favor of Nassau until the final quarter. Twice the so-called Princeton eleven threatened to score, early in the opening period and again in the third quarter, when Stan Keek, former Princeton All-American lineman, attempted placement kicks, both of which fell short.

At the opening of the final quarter the Notre Dame players launched an offensive from their own 15-yard line which took them straight to the so-called Princeton team's 2-yard marker. Thrice the "Four Horsemen" battled an impregnable forward wall; then Stuhldreher, 1924 All-American quarter, plowed through centre for the lone touchdown, inches over the line. He failed to kick goal.

The Melvilles fought hard, making a real battle of it in the first quarter but speed, power and experience were against them and the visitors made five touchdowns without meeting a single serious threat at their own goal.

The Eastern All-Stars were defeated, 6 to 0 by a Western All-Star team in San Francisco last Saturday.

STERNAMAN ALSO TALLIES

Second Touchdown Follows Star's Sprint in Last Period—Quarter Makes 11 Points.

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 1 (AP).—Red Grange proved the star of the game between the Chicago Bears and the Tampa Cardinals here this afternoon, when he broke through the stubborn line of the Cardinals in the last quarter and raced seventy yards for a touchdown, Sternaman adding the point. The game ended in a 17-to-3 victory for Grange's team.

The Bears then began a steady march down the field and, aided by a twenty-yard forward pass, reached the five-yard line, whence Sternaman carried the ball over the line and kicked goal. The game ended with two more plays.

Grange's team scored three points in the first period. Sternaman made a perfect drop kick. Grange carried the ball three times in the first period, but failed to gain in two attempts. The third time, however, he made six yards around left end. A forward pass, Grange to Sternaman, netted thirty yards.

Ursella tied the score late in the third period with a drop kick from the thirty-yard line at a difficult angle. On the next play Lamb made a forty-yard return of the kick-off. Each team held at critical moments during the quarter, forcing the opponents to kick. Runners were thrown for frequent losses.

Returning to the game in the fourth period, Grange ran sixty yards for his touchdown. Joe Sternaman, who again entered the game in the final period for the Bears, then also scored a touchdown. Goal was kicked in both instances.

PALM BEACH, Fla., Jan. 1.—Unleashing a savage aerial attack in the last six minutes of play, Tim Callahan's Coral Gables Collegian professional football team turned what appeared to be a certain defeat into a brilliant victory here this afternoon, downing the New York Giants by a score of 13 to 3.

During three quarters the heavy Giant line had stopped every attempt the Floridians made to break through. A placement-kick from the 35-yard line by White, the New York fullback, had put the Giants ahead.

In the last quarter Ernst faked a placement, but instead of kicking tossed a long forward-pass to McBride. The former Giant star made a leaping catch behind the Giants' goal line for the first touchdown. An attempted placement kick for the extra point was blocked.

On the next kick-off the Giants received. A costly fumble on their own 25-yard line was recovered by Bomar, formerly of the Giants, who ran it over for a touchdown. McBride kicked the goal.

Tilden to Play Until He Meets Master; Opposes Champions Retiring Undefeated

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 1 (AP).—William T. Tilden, national tennis champion, will not retire from the game until he is defeated, which also means he will not turn professional.

"I do not approve of champions in any sport retiring undefeated," Tilden said today, "and unless I become physically incapacitated I expect to go on defending my tennis title until some one comes along and wins it away from me.

"It is not to the best interests of the game or fair to my successor to do otherwise. I would not have wanted to win my first championship that way, and I believe others have the same feeling. I expect to go on playing through the national championships until some player proves himself better than I am."

The six-times champion makes his professional stage début this week in a comedy and is awaiting its success or failure before making any tennis plans for the coming season.

"I may not devote as much time in tournament play as I have in the past," he said. "If I have any success on the stage or screen, I will naturally stick to that and take a holiday for the big tennis season, the last of August and the beginning of September."

SYRACUSE BEATS TIGERS.

Comes From Behind and Downs Princeton Five by 32 to 17.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Princeton made an early bid for victory over the Syracuse University quintet at Archbold Gymnasium tonight but could not hold the lead, and the Orange won, 32 to 17, mainly through the brilliant playing of Vic Hanson.

Early in the play Princeton took the lead, 9 to 8. Then Hanson scored, and from that moment Syracuse was supreme. The score at half time was 18 to 11 in favor of Syracuse.

SHADE BEATS TODD IN GARDEN BATTLE

HARMON STOPS GOLDMAN

RESULTS OF GARDEN BOUTS.

By JAMES P. DAWSON.

Dave Shade started the new year in an approved manner last night. Before a crowd of about 7,000 fight fans in Madison Square Garden, the California boxer battered his way to the decision over Roland Todd, English middleweight, in a ten-round bout which was spectacular and held enough thrills to satisfy everybody.

Shade didn't knock Todd out, because the Californian fought himself out at critical moments in the battle when he had Todd in distress and because Todd, bobbing and weaving, presented at times a target which was very difficult to hit.

There was no question, however, that Shade was the winner. He took every round of the ten and in the third, fifth, seventh, eighth and ninth sessions had Todd staggering under the impact of vicious left and right hooks to the jaw. The Englishman gave an exhibition of gameness under fire and, at times, a display of defensive skill which were remarkable and which contributed in no small part to Shade's failure to score a knockout.

Shade Starts With a Rush.

Shade started as if he would end the battle in the first round and in the very first exchange. As the opening punch of the battle the Californian hooked a long left to Todd's jaw and the Englishman went staggering back to the ropes, eyes blinking, with Shade after him like an enraged bull. Pinned in a neutral corner, Todd was subjected to a withering fire, but survived Shade's opening assault.

Twisting, bobbing and weaving, Shade was a bewildering, tormenting attacker and an ever-moving, difficult target in defense. He cut Todd's mouth and drew the blood with that opening outburst, and in the second session the Californian opened a slight cut over Todd's right eye.

It looked like the finish again in the third session when Shade hooked a left to the jaw and followed with a right which sent Todd down for a count of two. Arising, Todd was battered around the ring as Shade fought for a knockout. In one of his furious rallies Shade almost crashed through the ropes as he missed two vicious lunges at the English lad.

Fifth Also Strenuous.

Shade eased up a little in the fourth session and Todd, taking heart, jabbed often enough to bring the blood from Shade's nose. Todd had another trying time of it in the fifth session when he was staggered by Shade, but the English boxer flashed one of the greatest exhibitions of defensive skill he has ever shown as Shade plunged and tore at him.

The sixth was a quiet session, but in the seventh Todd started the fireworks when he drove Shade off balance with a right to the head. Shade tore after his rival and fought himself out trying for a knockout. Todd survived the storm because he made Shade miss many of his punches.

In the eighth session Shade again staggered Todd, but the English fighter withstood his rival's attack and was fighting back with determination when the bell ended the round. Through the ninth and tenth Shade never ceased trying for a knockout and Todd never stopped jabbing and swinging at the Californian, landing occasionally. Shade weighed 155½ pounds and Todd 159 pounds.

Harmon Knocks Out Goldman.

The crowd witnessed a spectacular knockout in the semi-final scheduled for ten rounds, when Willie Harmon, east side strong boy, battered Nate Goldman, Philadelphia's conqueror of Lew Tendler, down in two rounds. This fight was hardly started before it was over with Goldman crawling on hands and knees as Referee Eddie Purdy shood above him chanting the ten seconds that made the knockout. The Philadelphian almost crashed through the ropes as he gamely tried to regain his feet at the end of the count.

Harmon, landing simultaneously with the bell ending the first round, crashed over a right to the jaw and then a long left hook to the jaw, which landed solidly and sent Goldman down in his tracks, the Philadelphian's head striking the floor of the ring with a thud, a fraction of a second after the bell rang.

Goldman's seconds leaped in and carried the Philadelphian to his corner. He was "out" beyond repair, but his handlers worked heroically over Goldman during the minute's intermission, and when the bell rang for the start of the second session, Goldman was pushed forward from his corner stool, only to fall on his face on the ring floor. The Philadelphian floundered all over the ring as he tried to get to his feet, and finally was counted out.

There was some discussion after the bout on the legality of the blows with which Harmon spilled his rival in the first. But the punches were absolutely legal. They were driven home simultaneously with the bell. Harmon weighed 143 pounds and Goldman 141½ pounds.

Freeman Stops Baker.

In the six-round preliminary, Yale Okun, east side heavyweight, won the decision from Georgie Manley, Denver. Andy Di Vodi, the Brooklyn lightweight, knocked out Barney Keeley of the west side in the second session of their scheduled four-round bout which opened the holiday show. In an extra four-rounder Johnny Pilkington, New York lightweight, and Phil Richards, Briton, fought a draw.

Frosty Peters a New Grange, Zuppke's View of Latest Find

URBANA, Ill., Jan. 1 (AP).—Coach Zuppke of Illinois may not expect to find any more "$100,000 players" on his freshman squads, but he is keeping a sharp eye on probable successors of Red Grange. And he thinks he has found one who can partly fill the iceman's shoes, providing scholastic difficulties do not interfere. The promising find is Forrest (Frosty) Peters of Billings, Mont., who kicked seven field goals in one game in his high school days. This Fall he excelled all the varsity candidates in booting them, scoring several from the 55-yard line. Besides this, Peters is one of the best forward passers seen at Illinois since the days of Larry Walquist.

GREB TO RISK TITLE AGAINST FLOWERS

TO BOX WAY INTO SHAPE

Will Begin "Training Trip" by Bout With Todd at Toronto—Other Ring News.

Harry Greb will defend his world's middleweight title in a fifteen-round bout against Tiger Flowers, Atlanta's negro contender for the championship, in Madison Square Garden on the night of Feb. 26. The match, ordered by the State Athletic Commission when it accepted the challenge of Flowers and commanded Greb to accept or reject the defi within thirty days, was practically closed yesterday on Greb's arrival here from Atlantic City.

At his headquarters in the Claridge Hotel, following a conference with Matchmaker Jess McMahon at the Garden, Greb announced that he had agreed with McMahon on the date for the fight and that the match will be signed formally after another conference at which the title-holder expects to adjust a slight financial difference which prevented the signing yesterday.

The bout will be preceded by a comprehensive schedule which Greb is to undertake in accordance with his established custom of fighting himself into shape for the defense of his crown. This schedule, starting next week, will be an extremely active one for the champion and will take him to Canada, to the Coast, and possibly to the southland. Greb opens his campaign in Toronto on Jan. 11 with a ten-round bout against Roland Todd, English middleweight. He will return to Pittsburgh immediately after this match and on Jan. 15 will depart for the Coast.

There Greb has signed for one match and has another in prospect. He is to box Ted Moore, English middleweight, a return bout at Jack Root's club in Los Angeles on Jan. 26 and two weeks after this engagement the middleweight champion, according to present plans, is to tackle Leo Lomski, Coast boxer, who is compiling quite a record in California rings.

On his arrival here yesterday Greb accounted for the reports which were circulated to the effect that he intended to ignore the challenge of Flowers. The middleweight champion frankly evinced a deep respect for the ability of the negro southpaw who boasts a style similar to that of Greb.

Sailor Eddie Huffman, California heavyweight who made an impression on metropolitan fans with his fighting against Jack De Mave and Ad Stone, will be forced to forego boxing for at least another two weeks, it was learned yesterday when Charlie Cook, pilot of the Coast boxer, declined an offer of a return bout with Stone in Madison Square Garden on Jan. 15.

Word was received here yesterday that Pete Latzo, Scranton (Pa.) welterweight, today will conclude hard training for his bout against Italian Joe Gans, Brooklyn middleweight, which is to be the feature attraction Monday night at the New Broadway Arena, Brooklyn.

Promoter Ben Feinberg of the Broadway now is negotiating for three ten-round bouts for the show he will conduct on Jan. 11. If his plans materialize, Feinberg will promote matches in which Al Clitty will face Mike Dundee of Chicago, Ernie Jarvis will face Corporal Izzy Schwartz for the third time, and Joey Ross will oppose Johnny Breslin.

FINNEGAN RALLIES TO DEFEAT MAYRS

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 1.—Ten thousand fans dejectedly looked at the main bout in the Arena show this afternoon because Honey Boy Finnegan of Boston was not coming up to expectations. Then they became optimistic. In the sixth round Finnegan became a fiery puncher. Before the round ended Finnegan had Mayrs almost out. When the fight ended in the tenth Honey Boy was the winner.

A stealthy left uppercut, so swift and sharp that it was hard to follow, was the winning punch for Finnegan. Delivered at close range, the blow made a wreck out of the lower part of Mayrs's face in the sixth. The punch lifted Mayrs back on his heels and started the Baltimore boy on the down grade to defeat.

BETHLEHEM BEATS GIANTS AT SOCCER

WANDERERS BREAK LOOSE

Swamp Philadelphia by 6 to 0—Boston Blanks Indiana—Results of Other Games.

Defeating the New York Giants in a hard-fought game before 3,000 at New York Oval yesterday the Bethlehem soccer team gained two points in the standing of the American Soccer League. The steelworkers barely won by 1 goal to 0, thanks to a neat bit of work on the part of Archie Stark, their famous centre forward.

The Giants pressed with a will at the start, setting a fast pace. Robertson of Bethlehem handled the ball and the situation was decidedly critical for Bethlehem as Bremner dropped the ball in the goal mouth. Carnihan cleared in good shape. The first good try by Bethlehem was MacDonald's after ten minutes. His hard drive was well taken by Douglas. Twenty minutes had elapsed when Jaap centred beautifully to Stark, who headed into the Giant's net for the first and only goal of the game.

Resuming, Brown went through for the home team, but Crilley shot wide. Jaap once more centred to Stark, who headed to Douglas near half-time. Bethlehem kept up the pressure upon the Giants' goal in the second half, Stark missing with a shot that went over the bar. Bethlehem's goal was open momentarily, but Bremner could not make it. The visitors forced two corners. Stark again got Jaap's pass, the ball hitting the upright. Two more corners came to Bethlehem in the closing minutes.

Philadelphia Is Routed.

Philadelphia was badly beaten in the American Soccer League match at Hawthorne Field yesterday, the Brooklyn Wanderers winning, 6 goals to 0. The game was virtually decided at half time, when the Wanderers were leading by 3—0. A crowd of 1,500 saw the match. Philadelphia's slump was a genuine surprise, following so close upon the tie with Fall River in Philadelphia.

Wardrop scored for Brooklyn in the first three minutes after a good try by Nelson. The Wanderers got possession again and Nelson headed into the Philadelphia net after passes by McManus and Mason. As Wardrop's drive drew Kucklick out Nelson scored again, seven minutes later.

A long shot by McManus nestled in Philadelphia's goal fifteen minutes after the restart. Yule scored for Brooklyn from a well-aimed drive by Manson and on the next push by the Wanderers Nelson once more scored in a breakaway.

| WANDERERS (6). | | PHILADELPHIA (0). |

Indiana Flooring Loses.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 1.—The Boston soccer team defeated Indiana Flooring F. C. of New York, 2 to 0, here today in one of the best-played games of the season. While Boston clearly held the upper hand and won deservedly, Indiana showed real class.

Opening with the wind in its favor, Boston had much the better of the first half. The New Yorkers' best chance came after 15 minutes of play, when Millar got clean through on a pass from McGhee only to shoot weakly behind.

In sustained pressure Boston opened the scoring midway through the first half, McIntyre beating Renzulli with a splendid drive. Renzulli saved on numerous occasions, but McNab added a second with a fash high shot.

In the second period the Floor Layers enjoyed the advantage of the wind but could make little impression on the Boston defense. Westwater drove toward an empty goal, but Ferguson dove at it and threw out the ball. McNab, who took the penalty kick, lofted high over the bar.

SELIGSON CAPTURES JUNIOR NET TITLE

Beats Jacobs, 8-6, 2-6, 6-0, 5-7, 6-1, in Final—Shields Downs Thomas for Boys' Honors.

HILL AND JOHNSON REPEAT

Julius Seligson, New York.

Frank Shields, New York.

Junior Doubles.

Malcolm T. Hill and Henry L. Johnson Jr., Waban, Mass.

By ALLISON DANZIG.

It was a happy New Year's Day for Julius Seligson and Frank Shields yesterday. Thanks to these two youths, the one 16 years old and the other 15, the national junior and boys' indoor tennis championships will remain in New York for the next twelve months.

In a five-set match that lasted two hours Seligson defeated Edward Jacobs of Baltimore City College at 8—6, 2—6, 6—0, 5—7, 6—1 in the final round of the tournament at the Seventh Regiment Armory, while Shields disposed of Walter Thomas of Elmora, N. J., in the concluding match in the boys' championship at 6—4, 7—5.

Seligson succeeds Horace Orser of this city as the junior titleholder and Shields now wears the crown that adorned the head of Jacobs, who has passed the boys' age of eligibility.

It was not a day for rejoicing for the 16-year-old Baltimore youth, for after losing to Seligson he went back on the court with Everett Smith of this city and failed in his quest for the junior doubles title. Malcolm T. Hill and Henry L. Johnson of Waban, Mass., defeated them in the championship round at 6—0, 6—4, 4—6, 6—2. This was the third year in a row that the Massachusetts team won the title, a distinction that has been achieved by no other combination in the eleven years' history of the tournament.

Seligson Not Seeded Player.

Seligson's victory in the junior singles is as notable a triumph as probably has been gained in the championship. Regarded at the start as having only an outside chance, and disregarded when the list of ten seeded players was arranged, he toppled over one favorite after another, starting with Hill, who was the first choice of the Tournament Committee for seeding.

In coming through to the final Seligson did not lose a single set, and the sum total of games won by his six opponents up to that round was thirteen. If it is any comfort to Jacobs, he has the distinction of being the only player to carry the new champion beyond the minimum number of sets. Even Warren Coen, the 14-year-old Kansas City prodigy, was unable to get more than two games from Seligson.

The victory of the new champion was well earned. He showed a more rounded game than Jacobs and in steadiness and power of stroking he was clearly the superior of the Baltimore youth. Jacobs's only hope lay in his ability as a shotmaker. During the course of the two hours of play he made more spectacular volleys and half volleys than have been seen at the armory all week. From backcourt he was never able to stand up against Seligson, and, realizing that he must win with his volleying if at all Jacobs went to the net persistently.

In the opening set Seligson took the first two games and then Jacobs won the three following. Games went on service until Seligson broke through in the thirteenth and then won the fourteenth. Jacobs's ground strokes were soft and uncertain but his marvelous volleying kept him on close terms with the other. In the second set Seligson was less decisive in his stroking and let down in accuracy. Jacobs, continuing to bring off the most difficult shots at the net, took the set by a big margin.

Jacobs Loses Control.

In the third set Jacobs lost all control of his ground strokes and his net attack was demoralized as Seligson whipped back his service for placement after placement. In the third game the New York youth scored four placements in succession, sticking the ball back fast at the other's feet three times as he rushed forward and passing him on the fourth occasion for a love game. Seligson took the set at love and dropped but five points.

He extended his winning streak to eight games by taking the first two of the fourth set. It looked as though Jacobs was at the end of his rope, but the Baltimore youth regained control of his racquet at this point and three beautiful volley shots in the third game did much to restore confidence in himself. Fighting with admirable spirit and, refusing to become discouraged by the passing shots of Seligson, Jacobs took three games in a row with the most decisive sort of volleying and finally won the set at 7-5. This was perhaps the most interesting set of the match and the evenness of the play is indicated by the fact that both players won thirty-three points.

Seligson took the heart out of his opponent early in the final set with his cross-court returns of service. Jacobs, after dropping the first game at 5-3, lost all control and made error after error. His volleys went either into the net or out of court and these mistakes robbed him of all confidence in himself. He won the fourth game after trailing at 0-30 and the three next went quickly as Seligson forced him into error making with his cleverly placed shots at his feet or across court.

Shields Repeats Victory.

The meeting between Shields and Thomas in the final of the boys' championship was their second of the year. They met in the title round of the boys' outdoor championship in the West last Summer, and on that occasion also, Shields was the winner. Thomas made a game fight to even the score with the New York youth and played unusually good tennis for a boy of his age, but Shields was strong in every department and could not be resisted.

In the first set Shields broke through in the opening game and Thomas retaliated in the second game. Shields broke through again in the seventh game, making two smashing volleys, and held his advantage until he had six games. Both youths were playing fast, hard-hitting tennis and mixing up their attack well. Shields broke through in the first game of the second set also and won the second to lead at 2—0.

Thomas fought with all his heart and evened up the score, covering court in unflagging fashion. Shields broke through again in the eleventh game and won the twelfth on service at love for the set and match. Thus, after failing in the final round against Jacobs last year, Shields realized his ambition and added the indoor crown to the outdoor.

The splendid team work of Hill and Johnson carried them to victory in the final of the doubles. Before meeting Jacobs and Smith they had put out John Millen and Milton Hofkin of the University of Pennsylvania at 7—5, 6—4. Smith played perhaps the best tennis of the four players on the court in the final and won four of his service games at love but the combination work of the Massachusetts youths gave them the advantage.

The Soviet team made a striking entrance in their blood-red jerseys, parading behind a flag bearing the Soviet hammer and sickle, to the strains of the "International." They have downed teams representing Finland, Turkey and some of the Central European countries, and have yet to taste defeat.

MAROONS FAVORED TO WIN.

But Experts Predict N. Y. Pro Six Will Surprise Canadians Tonight.

Word was received here yesterday afternoon that the New York pro hockey team had arrived in Montreal, Canada, for its National Hockey League match with the Montreal Maroons tonight. The game promises to be very fast and it is estimated that a crowd of 10,000 persons will be present when the two teams go on the ice. Because of a previous victory over the Americans, the Maroons are slightly favored to win, but experts predict that the Montreal sextet is due for a surprise.

Mickey Roach was on the ice yesterday morning when the New York six had a fast workout. He was taken ill of appendicitis when the team was training at Niagara Falls prior to the opening of the season and has not been able to take part in any of the matches, but is expected to be ready for play within two weeks. He did not exert himself to any great extent during the practice.

| NEW YORK. | | MONTREAL. |
| R. Green | L.W. | Seibert |
| S. Green | R.W. | Broadbent |
| Langlois | L.D. | Kitchen |
| McKinnon | R.D. | Noble |

Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. Lowers World Marks In Three Backstroke Relay Swim Tests

The Brooklyn Central Y. M. C. A. broke its own backstroke relay world's records yesterday in a New Year's day exhibition at its home pool. The event was sanctioned by the A. A. U. and three new marks were hung up.

A four-man team set the first record in the 600-yard event. Each man swam 150 yards and the time was lowered from 7:35 1-5 to 7:28. The team was composed of Fay Smith, who had the fastest individual time of 1:50 2-5; Robert Hosie, 1:51 4-5; Walter Spence, 1:51 3-5, and Victor Kiffe, 1:54. The same quartet and Harry Lewis then lowered the 750-yard mark from 9:35 1-5 to 9:25 4-5. Lewis's time for the 150 yards was 1:57 4-5.

With August Weinrich as the sixth member of the team the Central swimmers next lowered their record for 900 yards. The old mark was 11:42 1-5 and the new one 11:26 4-5. Weinrich's time was 2:01.

To set up a time for the mile backstroke Gordon Peyton, Paul Lockwood, Arthur Langezin, Stanley Brooks and George Cronin were added, each swimming 150 yards, and Theodore Smith completed the 110 yards of the distance. The time they made was 24:21 1-5 which is regarded as a best performance though not an official record.

Walter Spence swimming the 150-yard medley race came within 3-5 of a second of equalling his own record set in the same pool. His time yesterday was 1:35 3-5.

MELRATH IS VICTOR IN LIVE BIRD SHOOT

Special to The New York Times.

READING, Pa., Jan. 1.—New York amateur wing shots figured among the trophy winners here today in the nineteenth annual New Year's Day live bird handicap shoot of the Hercules Gun Club of Reading, fifty-two gunners from New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania participating.

Earl B. Melrath of the Penn Athletic Club of Philadelphia divided first honors in the handicap, the feature event at 20 flyers, with Howard J. Yoder of Shoemakersville and Arthur Thompson of Tower City, each killing twenty straight. Melrath won the Hercules Cup in the shootoff, with Yoder taking second and Thompson third prize.

Stuart Scott, New York Athletic Club, tied with C. A. Helt of Columbia University and Roy H. Brown of the Millrose Athletic Club of New York, and ten other gunners on nineteen kills each for the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh trophies. In the award of the trophies, Scott won fourth, with G. D. Baldwin of West Chester, Pa., fifth, while Helt, the Columbia University student, received sixth, and Roy Brown the seventh prize.

Scott, Helt and ten other gunners tied with ten straight kills each in the Hercules Introductory, ten flyers, twenty-eight yards rise. Harder conditions could not have been made to order, as the high winds from the northwest greatly aided the flyers, and it took accurate pointing to bring the flyers down inside the thirty-yard boundary.

The eighth annual Great Eastern live bird handicap, which is scheduled here Friday and Saturday, Jan. 8 and 9, under the auspices of the Hercules Gun Club, will have all the leading amateur shots of the United States and Canada competing, today's shoot giving the gunners an opportunity to practice over the Reading fair ground traps, over which the Great Eastern handicap, emblematic of the live bird championship of the East, will be shot.

Showing great speed and reserve, Gorman won the 220-yard, 440-yard and one half-mile races handily, and completed his triumph by scoring second in the mile, which was won by Valentine Bialis of Lake Placid. Joe Moore did not defend his title.

The meet was noteworthy for the first American appearance of Clas Thunberg, Olympic champion, who vainly attempted to break the records for two miles held by Olaf Rudd. Thunberg's time for the distance was 6 minutes 2 3-5 seconds. Rudd's mark was 5 minutes 42 3-5 seconds. Thunberg's best performance was his time for the first mile and one-half, which he skated in 4 minutes 39 seconds.

Morris Takes Memorial Race.

Miss Elsie Muller of New York won the ladies' championship, defeating Miss Leila Brooks of the Old Orchard Club, Toronto. Miss Muller scored victories in all three events after Miss Brooks had failed in a close finish for the 440-yard event. Miss Brooks was runner-up in the 880-yard and 220-yard races.

The Joseph F. Donoghue Memorial race, three miles, was won by Lewis Morris of New York, who came up from sixth place in a field of eighty, to win in the last lap after Eddie Meyers, Valentine Bialis and Richard Donovan had battled for the lead in the final mile.

Gorman was in splendid condition today. His winning sprints in the preliminaries, semi-finals and final thrilled the crowd again and again. Only twice, in one preliminary and one final, was he beaten.

Miss Muller Gets Revenge.

Miss Muller's victory avenged a defeat that Miss Brooks administered to the New York girl when the two met in Pittsburgh in the national championships last year.

2 HOCKEY GAMES TOMORROW

Boston and New York Amateur Sixes to Clash on Garden Ice.

Two hockey games, both in the Eastern Amateur League, will be played on the Garden rink tomorrow night when the Knickerbockers of New York meet the New York A. C. sextet, and the Père Marquette six of Boston faces the St. Nicks of New York. Two referees will officiate during the clash between the two New York teams, which will be played after the Boston and New York contest.

The Père Marquette players are due in the city today and probably will find time to take a practice spin on the ice. A large delegation of followers is expected here from the Hub City for the contest, but the fireworks of the evening are looked for in the battle between the New York sextets, as rivalry between the two has reached a high pitch.

Added attractions tomorrow night will be music by Vincent Lopez and his orchestra and exhibition of figure skating, as well as a series of handicap speed skating races.

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Williams was the final victor over Yale in their series of four hockey games, finished today on the Lake Placid Club's rink, with only two points margin in the total points scored, put with two victories to Yale's one and one tie game.

Ferguson and Frey have also been outstanding stars. Both teams are strong and promise to rate high in collegiate matches on their present schedules. Yale and Williams do not meet later.

WISCONSIN GETS TIE FOR HARDING TROPHY

FINAL OF 7 EVENTS DECIDES

Victory of Dahl in Leap Also Helps to Win Foch and Team Prize for Mid-Westerners.

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Competition between the Universities of Wisconsin and New Hampshire remained a tie today at the close of the last event in the Winter sports competition for the Harding Trophy held under the auspices of the Lake Placid Club. Each finished with 18 points, and the name of each will be engraved on the trophy. This is the first time the Middle West has been a formidable contender, Eastern colleges heretofore always having won the trophy.

Yesterday's ski-skate and snowshoe races, snowshoe dash and figure skating left these two universities tied with 13 points each. New Hampshire eased ahead to 16 points today in the ski efficiency test with 3 points won by Gunnar Michelson, who took second place. Proctor of Dartmouth won the event, Wisconsin failing to place.

The final award hung on the ski jumping, the last of seven events in the competition, and the only one counting in the Foch Trophy award. This event, announced for the club's intermediate hill, on a petition circulated by Gordon Brown of Williams, was transferred to the 50-meter jump. For the Foch Trophy the award goes to officially entered college teams, while for the Harding Trophy the event goes to the highest scoring individual—5 points to winner, 3 to second, 2 to the third, 1 to the fourth.

Hans Troye of Wisconsin was first, bringing Wisconsin's total to 18. Gerald Dupuis of Toronto took second. Gunnar Michelson, third, bringing New Hampshire's total to 18. C. N. Proctor of Dartmouth was fourth.

Knut Dahl and Robert Pabst, supporting Troye on Wisconsin's jumping team rated so well that Wisconsin also won the team score and took the Foch Trophy.

Stewart Weston's plucky work for New Hampshire brought his team into second place when he refused to drop out after a bad fall on his first jump had left him with two cracked ribs, taking his second and third jumps. Toronto dropped into third place for the Foch Trophy because Dupuis was a single entry. Dartmouth placed fourth on the jumping of C. N. Proctor alone.

Starting from the extreme top of the take-off in unofficial jumps after the close of the meet, Dahl set a new hill record for college week, making 136 feet standing.

NURMI HOME FIRST AT FAIR GROUNDS

ABSTRACT IS HEAD BEHIND

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 1.—In a spectacular and thrilling finish, in which the first three horses were separated by heads only, the Greentree Stable's three-year-old colt Nurmi this afternoon captured the eighth running of the New Year's Handicap, which was the leading number of a first-class card for the opening day of the forty-day meeting of the Louisiana Jockey Club at the Fair Grounds. Splendidly ridden by "Goldie" Johnson, Nurmi ran the mile and a sixteenth in 1:50 3-5, under the feather of 96 pounds, over a good, but not fast, course. Clyde Phillips saddled the winner, which earned $5,050 for Mrs. Payne Whitney. Nurmi, coupled with his stable companion, Dazzler, was the 7 to 5 favorite, the entry paying $4.80 for a $2 ticket in the mutuels.

Twelve scratches reduced the field for the holiday feature to seven, and all but two of those that faced the barrier were well played. J. Burttschell's Lounger, winner of his last two starts here and the second choice in the wagering, gained a step at the barrier and made the early pace. He succumbed to Dazzler's challenge at the half-mile mark and gradually dropped back to finish out of the money. Dazzler tired after his early rush.

Nurmi trailed the leaders to the last turn, being well rated by Johnson. He came on gamely when Johnson set him down and just lasted to win by the margin of his head. The Pueblo Stable's four-year-old Delhi colt Abstract was last to find his stride and was outrun during the early part of the race. In the stretch drive he came with a rush on the inside and probably would have won in another jump or two. The others did not figure in the contention.

Scratch, R. F. Leichleiter's game and consistent four-year-old colt, easily won the George W. Knott Purse, a gallop of a mile and seventy yards for three-year-olds and upward, in a field of eight. It was his sixth victory out of his last seven starts and he was the 7-to-10 favorite, paying $3.40 in the mutuels.

The opening number marked the first appearance of the two-year-olds of 1926, and seven of the baby racers answered the bugle for the dash of three furlongs for the Colonel R. W. Simmons Purse of $1,200. While the first three home made an exciting finish, coming to the wire heads apart, the contest was not a real test of juvenile speed and merit, since four of the contenders ran out, putting an entirely different complexion on the result.

W. H. Whitehouse's Royal Julian, a chestnut son of Royal II and Julia L., proved to be the winner, with W. Fronk up. He was fourth turning for home, but saved ground, instead of bearing out, stood a long drive gamely and just got up. M. Madden's Dwyer's Way was off well, led his field coming into the stretch and then bore out, which cost him the race.

Filly Beats Spanish Rose in the New Year's Handicap at Oriental Park.

HAVANA, Jan. 1.—Undefeated in her last four starts, and continuing on her winning way, Harned Brother's fleet filly, Gliding Fox, gave further proof of her merits when she was alloted 120 pounds and was the winner of the New Year's Handicap at Oriental Park here today.

Geving, who rode Gliding Fox in all her races here, permitted her to step along for the first part of the mile and a sixteenth trip. When she was settled in her stride on the back stretch he took a snug hold of the daughter of Moss Fox-Gliding Belle and reserved her speed for the last three furlongs. On reaching the furlong pole he applied the whip to keep her at her task. Just as Spanish Rose made an effort, Geving aware of danger shook her up during the final furlong and at the end had a half length advantage.

Seven races were carded for the holiday attraction today and another large crowd visited the course to view the offerings provided. With clear weather, the day was one to be long remembered by the vast groups of tourists present.

To Z. E. McGregor's Lura went the honor of winning the first race of the new year here and to C. Allen the honor of piloting the first mount of the year to victory. Allen kept his mount in close attendance of Mitzi McGee as possible and she responded with good courage when settled down for the final test. She cut down the leader's gap and got up in the last sixteenth.

Mitzi McGee displayed keen speed from the break, was soon clear of her company and apparently going well within herself, but weakened when challenged. Lady Colito went well throughout the contest.

Pat Stanton uncovered a likely looking miss in Little Trump when she easily accounted for the third race, which was for three-year-olds. Well handled by the diminutive M. Dudley, who permitted her to go into the lead at once. He had a snug hold on her until reaching the top of the stretch, where he let her down and readily drew away from Only Star and was being eased up at the end.

MOONRAKER SCORES AT TIJUANA TRACK

TWO WINNERS FOR MUNDEN

Special to The New York Times.

TIJUANA, Mexico, Jan. 1.—Moonraker, La Brea Stable's six-year-old horse by Broomstick—Alster Cress, and an outsider in a field of six, this afternoon carried off the money in the second running of the New Year's Handicap. J. Smith brought him home by a margin of two lengths in a driving finish, earning $2,970 for his owner. Moonraker carried 105 pounds and ran the mile and a furlong in 1:53 flat over a heavy track. He paid $15.40 for a $2 ticket.

It was a poor day for the players of form, only two favorites showing the way past the winning post. Willie Munden continued his good riding, landing two winners—Spanish Star in the fifth and repeating in the sixth with Jack Fairman.

Osprey and Wampee were scratched out of the feature number and B. Long's Cherry Tree went to the post the short-priced favorite. Moonraker was given an excellent ride, Smith rating him out in front from the rise of the barrier. At no time was he in serious danger and held Cherry Tree safely in the stretch duel. The latter was hard ridden through the homestretch, but was unable to threaten the winner. S. Polk's Sure Fire finished two lengths back and was easily the best of the others.

The claiming handicap over the clubhouse course brought out a field of five, the winner being J. C. McGill's old gelding Jack Fairman. Munden stole a march on his opponents, opening up a good lead with his mount approaching the stretch turn. This enabled him to last long enough to beat J. A. Coburn's Faddist by a head in a hard finish. The Jones Stock Farm's Prince Til Til was three lengths back to take third money. The winner was third choice and paid $7.60 in the mutuels. He carried top weight of 109 pounds and ran the short mile in 1:36.

New York University successfully defended its claim to the championship of the Intercollegiate Chess League, won for the first time last year, by handily defeating Columbia, champion of the defunct C. H. Y. P. Chess League, by the score of 3 to 1 in the semi-final round of the twenty-seventh annual tournament at the rooms of the Brooklyn Chess Club yesterday. Columbia had previously won three matches in succession, while the champions had been played to a tie by C. C. N. Y.

It was the Lion's great opportunity to add the Intercollegiate League championship to the many other chess laurels that have gone to Morningside Heights, but the Blue and White was unable to win a single game. N. Y. U. won two of the matches outright and drew the games at the remaining boards.

The victorious team was made up of Max Kleiman, '26; Samuel S. Cohen, '29; Milton Pinkus, '28, and Israel Horowitz, '27. Cohen and Horowitz were the winners yesterday, and Kleiman clinched the victory by drawing with Captain Samuels of Columbia at the top board in an ending in which Samuels was a pawn ahead.

Pennsylvania defeated Cornell badly by 3½-½. J. Levine, L. Goldstein and D. Wiener won for the Quakers and J. Vanderslice drew against J. Gorowitz of Cornell.

Before the beginning of play this morning the players and officials will come together at a breakfast in Brooklyn, at which the annual business meeting will be held.

BIG ADVANCE SEEN IN LOCAL TRANSIT

BUSES A USEFUL ADJUNCT

Railway Advisory Council Has Done Much in a Year to Coordinate City Services.

Distinct progress has been made in the local transportation industry during the last year, according to Lucius S. Storrs, managing director of the American Electric Railway Association, who declared yesterday that electric car and bus services were being coördinated rapidly under single managements in most communities, electric lines were being modernized, and credit was being slowly restored. The public, he said, was showing increasing desire to work with local managements in solving transit problems.

"This improved situation doubtless is due in great part to a renewed interest in the business by owners of large properties," said Mr. Storrs. "Realizing the need for improved local transportation facilities, outstanding figures in the industry, including Samuel Insull, Owen D. Young, Sidney Mitchell, General Guy E. Tripp, Henry L. Doherty, Herbert Porter, Henry G. Bradlee, Nicholas F. Brady, Britton I. Budd, Frank R. Coates, Samuel M. Curwen, C. D. Emmons, P. H. Gadsden, Edwin Gruhl, Thomas McCarter, Randal Morgan, John J. O'Brien, John H. Pardee, John N. Shannahan, Paul Shoup, R. P. Stevens, A. W. Thompson, with B. C. Cobb as Chairman, early in the year organized the Advisory Council for the purpose of accomplishing this end.

"Their initial efforts have been directed toward effecting sensible coordination and modernizing properties and thus improving credit. Only a start has been made by the council thus far, but the beneficial effects of their effort will be noted increasingly.

"One outstanding feature of the Council's work has been the rapid coordination of rail and bus service. Useless competition, resulting in duplicated service and doubled and tripled fares, is being supplanted by community-wide service under single managements operating economically, the public being benefited by a unified system of transportation with a single base fare. More than 250 electric railway companies now are operating bus service with some 5,000 vehicles over about 12,000 miles of route. This represents an increase over 1924 of eighty operating companies, a doubled number of buses and tripled miles of service.

"Taxes and traffic congestion are two of the most serious problems the industry faces.

"The average taxes of electric railways, according to the United States Census Office, amount to 55 per cent. of their total net earnings.

"Four out of every five persons who ride in any sort of vehicle travel on electric railway accommodations, yet they are being badly delayed by the vehicles of the one-fifth who travel in other conveyances. Certainly this four-fifths majority is entitled to the right of way, and the industry proposes to see that their rights are observed. In some cities police compel autos, trucks and slow-moving vehicles to keep off car tracks. This should be done in all cities."

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Most Business Centres Keep Holiday—London Money Rates Go Lower.

With virtually all of the world's Stock Exchanges and commodity markets keeping holiday yesterday, and even with New York not trading in foreign exchange or money, the chief financial interest of the day was directed to the London money market. Signs of relaxing rates in that market were unmistakable. Day-to-day loans fell from 5 per cent. to 3⅛, last Wednesday's figure; short-term loans, which on Wednesday stood a fraction above the 5 per cent. bank rate and which had fallen a little more than ⅛ of 1 per cent. Thursday, went yesterday as low as 4⅝, the lowest rate since the middle of December.

This downward movement at the new year's opening is entirely usual; on the present occasion it attracts attention only because of its possible bearing on the sterling market and the Bank of England's gold. Despite the movement of Lombard Street's price for money away from the bank rate, the Bank of England lost no more gold yesterday, and in fact took in a trifling sum. The probability is that the London money market will move pretty much in line with our own and that the New York movement will be the first point of interest when Wall Street arranges its new borrowings next Monday.

All experience indicates a distinct decline in New York Stock Exchange money rates. At this time a year ago call loans, which had commanded 5½ per cent. at the end of December, fell to 4 on the first business day of January and to 3 per cent. the next week. Even time loans on Stock Exchange collateral went from 3¾ per cent. to 3½, which was practically the same as the rate to which the London market had declined.

But 1925 had also opened with resumption of stock speculation of a violent and excited sort. The downward reaction in call-money rates, even with the superabundant credit resources of that day, was checked at once. The rate got back before the close of January to what was then described as the high figure of 4½ per cent. By the end of February, rediscounts at the New York Federal Reserve Bank had risen from $81,000,000 to $227,000,000 since the beginning of the year, its reserve ratio had fallen from 78¼ per cent. to 69⅝, and on Feb. 25 the bank advanced its rediscount rate, unquestionably with a view to arresting the spread of speculation.

If that could happen under the money-market auspices of the early weeks in 1925, it should not be difficult to foresee the possibilities of 1926, supposing a similar or more sweeping demonstration on the Stock Exchange. The Reserve Board's compilation of member-bank statements for the week ended Dec. 23 was published yesterday; it showed for the 719 institutions no less an increase in loans on Stock Exchange collateral than $90,000,000, whereas the same week in 1924 (which was also a speculative period) had been marked by an increase of only $34,000,000. In the three weeks of last month already reported on, such loans had expanded $187,000,000, and on Dec. 23 they stood $961,000,000 above the same date a year before.

If speculative Wall Street is guided by reasonable prudence, it will recognize that these figures' represent a greatly changed position and that money market and stock market are entering 1926 with a necessarily closer interrelation of their movements than in any of the five past years.

POLISH BANK CONTROL GOES TO JEWISH UNION

The American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee presented yesterday 51 per cent. of the shares of the Central Cooperative Bank of Poland to the Union of Jewish Cooperatives in that country. The remaining shares will for the present be retained by the committee, which is the sole owner of all the capital stock. The gift, announcement of which was made by David A. Brown, Chairman of the United Jewish Campaign for $15,000,000, is regarded as a progressive step in the effort that is being made by their coreligionists in this country to help the Jews of Poland back to a self-supporting basis.

The Joint Distribution Committee is the disbursing agency for the three great Jewish war relief organizations, through the efforts of which upward of $65,000,000 has been raised in this country since 1914.

The Central Cooperative Bank of Poland was organized in Warsaw by the Joint Distribution Committee several years ago as a financial institution against which about 150 mutual credit societies might draw in order to advance credits to artisans and merchants. The funds of the cooperative bank were supplied by the Joint Distribution Committee through its Reconstruction Committee, of which Colonel Herbert H. Lehman of the New York banking house of Lehman Brothers is Chairman. The affairs of the bank are administered by a directorate chosen by the Union of Jewish Cooperatives, but the final decision on all major questions could, under the original arrangement, be made only with the approval of the Joint Distribution Committee. This was done by the American organization because of its responsibility to the relief organizations, of which it is the agent.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

News, Comment and Incident, On the Stock Exchange and In the Financial Markets.

All markets in this country and most markets abroad were closed yesterday for the New Year's holiday. The New York Stock Exchange, the Curb Market and the Consolidated Exchange will reopen this morning for a two-hour market. The Cotton Exchanges of New York and New Orleans will both be closed today, as will the Chicago Board of Trade.

The 1926 Stock Market.

The thing which interests a multitude of people at the present time is a reasonable forecast of how the stock market will act in 1926; whether there will be a continuation of the present remarkable swing; or whether the bull market is in its final stages. Wall Street prophecies are admittedly dangerous. None but the professional prognosticators make them, and then usually in a manner which leaves them a gang-plank over which to march to dry land should the ship become water logged. There were few prophecies at the start of 1925, it will be remembered, which outlined such markets as have actually occurred this year. The first part of the year was a "Coolidge market"; the second a "motor market." Some of the level-headed market students now are inclined to look for what might be termed a "business market"; that is to say, a market in which stocks of all sorts will fluctuate most accurately in response to the manner in which business starts off in the new year. What many people would like to see would be a revival of stock market interest in such issues as the textiles, copper and shipping, as reflecting such improvement as takes place in these lines during the new year.

Three Important Decisions.

Three decisions by the Interstate Commerce Commission of more than usual importance are expected in the first quarter of 1926. The first, or whether the Nickel Plate consolidation is in the public interest, will determine the course of what its promoters have put forward as the fourth great trunk line of the East. The second will determine whether L. F. Loree may build his New York, Chicago & Pittsburgh, which he characterized as "the backbone of the premier railroad of the country." The entire commission will hear oral argument on his application on Jan. 14. The third will decide if the events leading to the receivership of the St. Paul were in any way questionable.

St. Paul's Prospects.

Prospects of an early termination of the St. Paul receivership brightened, it was said yesterday, with the announcement by bankers that 76 per cent. of the bonds involved had been deposited. This percentage, it is understood, does not include all of the securities originally deposited under the Roosevelt plan, some of which will be forthcoming when technical bars are removed. The foreclosure suit is expected to progress rapidly when it is filed in the Chicago courts, as much of the preliminary work is already out of the way.

A Problem for 1926.

The principal problem of the railroads for the coming year, it has been remarked, is not in increasing their freight loads or tractive power but in adjusting their passenger service. The continued inroads of motor competition have left many local lines without excuse for existence except on stormy days when buses and private automobiles may not run safely. An application on the part of the company to abandon the lines, however, brings forth protest from citizens who in some instances become so aroused that they purchase the branch lines themselves. This further complicates a problem upon which the carriers are now focusing their best efforts.

Oil Cost Accounting.

One of the important developments in the oil industry, and one which is likely to bring about a considerable amount of discussion at the forthcoming meeting of the American Petroleum Institute on the Pacific Coast, is the fight for a single standard or system of cost accounting for all companies. The older and most substantial companies realize that holders of oil shares as a class should know that there are different methods employed in obtaining income results from general operation. The one big item in their program is the distribution of the cost of drilling and the volume of depletion. All of the "old line" companies charge drilling costs to operating expenses. Some of the newer companies, who are only five or six years old, treat this item as a capital expenditure, consequently causing a minimum expense on a large drilling campaign which brings them a maximum of gross profit. Leaders of the industry will insist that a single standard of accounting obtain for all members, and that all companies charge drilling costs to operating expenses.

Compulsory Consolidations.

Many railroad men expressed accord yesterday with Professor Ripleys declaration before the American Economic Association against the compulsory consolidation feature of the bill Senator Cummins has introduced. This feature of the Cummins legislation, which demands that the carriers enter into union within three years, and the provision obligating properties earning more than 6 per cent. to divide their profits with the weaker roads, have aroused much ire in the financial district. They will form the chief basis of attack against the bill when it comes up in the Senate.

Utility Financing Outlook.

The new year will see no decrease in the volume of investment directed toward public utilities, in the opinion of those close to the industry. An increase in financing is considered a possibility, and it is estimated that the gross total will be in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000. This figure is based on an estimated valuation for the industry of more than $7,000,000,000. The same influences and conditions which have made for greater output demands in the utility field in 1925 are expected to continue in 1926. Among these are building activity, industrial expansion, progress in the rural districts and discoveries of new uses for both gas and electricity in manufacturing processes.

Railroad Construction in 1925.

More miles of new railway were built in this country in 1925 than in any year since 1919, and more miles of second track lines than in any other year since 1913. These facts are very gratifying to railroad men, who regard them as indicating a definite turning point from the long period in which abandonment exceeded construction. Each of the eight years ended with 1924 saw a decline in total railway mileage, the aggregate on Jan. 30, 1916, being 254,251, compared to 250,003 at the end of 1924, or 4,248 miles less. Mileage of new line built during 1925 was 644, and mileage of second track built 682. Mileage reported as abandoned and torn up was 456, and mileage abandoned but not torn up 150.

WANTS RAIL LAW CHANGED.

J. C. Davis Would Have Commerce Board Act on Voluntary Grouping.

James C. Davis, whose resignation as Director General of Railroads of the United States became effective Dec. 31, favors amending the Transportation act to permit the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove voluntary consolidations.

"The truth of it is," says Mr. Davis, "that through a long series of major, and in some instances very painful, legislative operations, carried on without the use of anesthetics, the railroads have been thoroughly domesticated, completely house-broken, and if they ever had any fangs they have long since been removed.

"The existing provisions of the law as to consolidation, requiring the commission in advance to prepare and adopt a general plan of consolidation of all the railroad properties of the United State into a fixed number of systems, are impracticable and impossible of execution. This conclusion seems now to be uniformly recognized. The Interstate Commerce Commission has so stated in its annual report and asked Congress to amend this section. The law should be amended permitting the commission to approve such consolidations as in its opinion are in the interest of the public welfare, having in mind some ultimate general plan of consolidation."

C. L. Eiermann Joins Rhoades & Co.

Carl Louis Eiermann has been admitted as a general partner to the firm of Rhoades & Co., members of the New York Stock Exchange, effective today. He became associated with the firm in 1922 as general manager. Previously he was a member of the staff of the J. J. Lynch Company, industrial engineers.

DULL YEAR-END WOOL TRADE

Mill Situation Hopeful, Foreign Markets Firm.

BOSTON, Jan. 1 (AP).—The Commercial Bulletin tomorrow will say: "The market for wool has been dull as a rule. A very few houses, however, report some good business and the advent of some of the shrewdest manufacturers in Summer Street in the last week of the year has been especially reassuring. Meanwhile the foreign markets, so far as they are open for business, show a slight increase in strength. The Australian sales are expected to rule firm at the resumption in Melbourne Monday.

"The mill situation shows little change as compared with a week ago, but the manufacturers appear to be very optimistic over the outlook and the wool trade is convinced of the healthy condition of the market for piece goods.

ELECTRIC LIGHT USERS GAIN

Increased 1,800,000 in 1925—Power Output Exceeds Rest of World.

In a statement issued yesterday M. H. Aylesworth, Managing Director of the National Electric Light Association, declared the electric light and power industry made a gain of 1,800,000 customers in 1925. The director said these figures were obtained in a national survey just completed, which showed that the electric light and power companies in the United States produced more electricity at a lower cost than all other countries in the world combined.

Mr. Aylesworth traced the growth of "superpower," or, as he called it, "physical interconnection of electric light and power systems," during the last year. He referred to the growing number of customers of light and power companies investing in securities of the companies.

$22,462,000 BONDS OFFERED THIS WEEK

SILK ISSUE THE FEATURE

Distribution of Cash Register Company Stock Expected to Lead This Week's Financing.

New bond offerings this week amounted to $22,462,000, which compared with $37,023,500 last week, also broken by a holiday, and $25,076,000 in the final week of 1924. The first week of 1926 is expected to bring a sharp increase in activity. The offerings, by groups, of this and last week follow:

| | This week. | Last week. |
| Public Utility | $12,000,000 | $12,937,500 |
| Industrial | 8,610,000 | 11,500,000 |
| Foreign | 1,000,000 | ........ |
| State and Municipal | 852,000 | 3,011,000 |

Transactions were on a small scale this week, representing chiefly the clearing up of the year's offerings in the industrial and the public utility divisions. A healthy demand was in evidence despite the holiday atmosphere of the market and, as has been the case most of the year, demand seemed to outweigh supply of attractive new issues. There were three offerings in the public utility field, representing large properties in the East and Middle West, and the issues were quickly subscribed.

In the industrial class the week's leader was an issue of $5,410,000 securities of the Belding Heminway Company, this financing marking the completion of the $20,000,000 merger of two pioneer American silk companies. Last Summer the Belding Company, long a family-controlled concern, was opened to public participation with a stock offering, and early this week its taking over of the Heminway properties was announced. The other industrial offering of the week represented the final financing incident to the merger of the country's two largest manufacturers of card index systems into the Rand Kardex Bureau, Inc.

There was only one foreign issue, but it was of an interesting character, consisting of $1,000,000 of the bonds of the National Bank of Panama. State and municipal financing of the week was for small amounts.

The most important financing of next week is expected to fall into the class of stock instead of bonds and to consist of a distribution to the public of a share in the ownership of the National Cash Register Company. This large concern, heretofore owned almost exclusively by the heirs of its founders, concluded negotiations last week for disposal of part of its holdings to Dillon, Read & Co. Details of the financing have not been announced, but it is expected to amount to $60,000,000 of common stock. If the transaction is carried out on these lines, it will constitute the largest common stock offering since the war and one of the largest ever made in Wall Street.

Large bond issues, both foreign and domestic, are expected to be announced early in the new year. Right up to the close of 1925 prices in the bond market remained firm, despite the seasonal tightness in money, and the new year starts with a broad investment demand in sight.

DAYTON, Ohio, Jan. 1 (AP).—An absolute denial that the stock reorganization plan of the National Cash Register Company was undertaken so that the cash register business of the Remington Arms Company could be taken over was made today by J. H. Barringer, First Vice President of the National company.

It was reported today that the announcements made thus far in the pending deal with Dillon, Read & Co. of New York hinted a considerable widening of the scope of activities of the Dayton industry.

"The Remington company has never figured in the deal," declared Mr. Barringer. "It has never been thought of, and I can say positively that Frederick B. Patterson intends to keep active control of the business here."

That the report might also have some basis founded on the recent litigation between the Dayton concern and the Remington company also was denied by Mr. Barringer.

Frederick B. Patterson, President of the National company and Chairman of its board, had not yet returned from New York yesterday morning.

Mr. Barringer said he had not been informed when Mr. Patterson would reach this city, and had not communicated with him since his departure several days ago.

Wall Street is awaiting the announcement, expected next week, of the details of the financing to be arranged in connection with the purchase by Dillon, Read & Co. of an interest in the National Cash Register Company. It is expected to amount to $60,000,000 and to consist mostly, if not entirely, of common stock, making it one of the largest transactions of its kind in Wall Street. No mention has been made here of the possibility of the National taking over the Remington company.

NATION'S PROGRESS SURE, SPEYER SAYS

OPPOSES FORCED MERGERS

He Would Have Roads Distribute More of Their Ownership Away From Wall Street.

James Speyer, head of the banking firm of Speyer & Co., said in a new Year summary of business and financial conditions yesterday that the peaceful evolution and progress of the United States seems to be assured. He mentioned tax reform, transportation and foreign relations as some of the important questions that must receive attention in the coming year.

"Not for many years has the reassembling of Congress caused so little apprehension to the business community as this year," said Mr. Speyer. "The reasons are apparent—first, people have confidence in President Coolidge, Secretary Mellon and his other advisers. Furthermore, it is realized that with the prevailing business activity, which affords opportunity for every one to find employment at good wages, the professional politician does not see much chance of increasing his popularity and support by advocating radical or otherwise disturbing measures. Nevertheless, voters should watch both houses of Congress, because there are important problems under consideration whose proper solution will help to continue and improve satisfactory economic and financial conditions in our country.

"One of these is the reform of our income taxation. The lower house of Congress has, by an overwhelming majority, endorsed the compromise measure framed by its committee. Like all compromises, it is not free from fault; but the men who did frame it deserve credit and the thanks of the nation, and it becomes the duty of every citizen to exercise his influence so that this law will be passed by the upper house as soon as possible and not be mutilated, as was the case last year.

Against Forced Rail Mergers.

"It is now generally realized that the correct solution of our transportation problem will benefit every citizen. We want the credit of our railroads not only maintained but strengthened, so that they will be able to raise the large amounts of capital needed to keep step with the growth of our population and our increasing commerce. We want, furthermore, a national transportation system not hampered by narrow or local prejudice or by State lines. It must be obvious that compulsory consolidation could not effectually accomplish this end; it would involve serious infringement of private property rights, not in accordance with the spirit of our Constitution. Our railroads have been built up through individual initiative and private capital.

"Every American who loves his country and its institutions should resist unnecessary Government interference in business and in private affairs of citizens, an abortive and harmful attempt of which is furnished by the present Prohibition law.

"Progressive and far-seeing managers of public utility corporations have shown the way to a larger distribution of their shares among their customers. Not only should officers and directors entrusted with the management of our railroad properties continue their campaign of education, but they might try to bring about a larger distribution of ownership, not only among the men they employ, but also among the shippers and people living along their lines, away from 'Wall Street'! There is some money available everywhere nowadays for investment in railroad securities.

"It is not only for our own well-being that transportation and other important problems should be solved and settled right, in a broad spirit, with justice to all. There is an added and world-wide reason why this should be done; the 'eyes of the world' are on the United States. We have become the great creditor nation. We have reached the last and final step of economic development. It has been estimated that $10,000,000,000 has so far been invested by our people in foreign securities, of which perhaps $1,000,000,000 was invested in 1925. We have only begun to export capital, a position which during the last fifty years or more was pre-eminently occupied by Great Britain, and it is a unique fact that we have accumulated and begun to export surplus capital when the resources of our country are not yet fully developed, and while there is still room in this blessed land of ours for millions to come and work and live happily and in comfort.

Our Trade Balance Favorable.

"We have also been able to maintain a favorable foreign trade balance, in spite of the fact that some of the European countries still have depreciated currencies and are still suffering seriously from the after effects of the war, and, one may add, of the peace treaties.

"What we commonly call 'prosperity' is, perhaps, largely due to the unconscious realiziation by our people of this position of financial and economic strength which we now occupy. We were bound to achieve this anyway, but as a consequence of the war we have attained it ten or twenty years sooner. Situated as we are, almost a whole continent as our heritage, and accustomed to self-government, we may, barring entirely unforseen events, reasonably expect to maintain and strengthen this economic and financial leadership. Looking ahead, we need not fear any serious troubles, except those which we may create for ourselves.

"It is natural, therefore, that not only our foreign policy (which the majority of the American people believe should keep us free from any foreign entanglements) but also the management of our internal affairs will be watched with critical eyes. If we can show the peoples of the world, and especially the new democracies, that in our country men and women of different nationalities and creeds can live together peaceably and that we are able to enact laws in a conservative and progressive spirit, suitable to changing conditions, we will not only continue to prosper ourselves, but we will also render a real service to mankind."

COMMODITY PRICES FALL IN BRITAIN

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The general tendency of wholesale commodity prices in 1925 was down, The Economist records, its index number falling fairly steadily from 4,855 to 4,251. This more than compensates for the rise in wholesale prices during 1924 and the index number is now at the lowest point since August, 1922. During December there was a decline of 248.71 points in spite of increases in wheat and flour.

There was a reduction in cotton, especially Egyptian, and in wool and silk. The figures for the month are:

|---|---|
| Cereals and meat | 936.5 |
| Textiles | 1,120 |
| Total | 4,251 |

Reviewing the general situation, The Economist points out that all groups are now less than 100 per cent. higher than at the outbreak of the war and that the general level of prices shows an increase of 65.8 per cent. as compared with 89.3 per cent. at the beginning of last year and 225.5 per cent. at the end of March, 1920.

Prices in Britain were approximately at the same level as in America. Taking 100 as the average in 1913, prices at the end of 1924 in Britain, as recorded by The Economist, were 180.3 and as recorded by Bradstreet's in the United States 151.3. By months they were:

June, 1925, in Britain 161.6, and in the United States 150.4.

September, 1925, in Britain 164.4, and in the United States 153.5.

November, 1925, in Britain 160.4, and in the United States 156.5.

December, 1925, in Britain 157.9; in the United States not yet available.

| Cereals and meats | 936.5 | 918.5 | 853 |
| Other food products | 679 | 704.5 | 815 |
| Textiles | 1,120 | 1,174.5 | 1,382 |
| Minerals | 733 | 737.5 | 774 |
| Miscellaneous | 782.5 | 787 | 755 |

| | | | |
| Jan. 1, 1926 | 4,251 | Jan. 1, 1924 | 4,530 |

EXHIBITS OMAR'S ALGEBRA.

Dr. Smith Shows Rare Collection to Mathematicians.

A copy of the book of algebra of Omar Khayyam, poet and astronomer, was one of the rare exhibits in the collection of the history of mathematics shown at Hunter College yesterday by Professor David E. Smith of Columbia, in connection with the meeting of the American Mathematical Society. There are 40,000 rare books, manuscripts, letters, portraits and instruments in the collection.

Dr. Smith explained his collection at the afternoon session and told of receiving Omar's book from a Persian of Northern India. He said he had been seeking the book for twenty years and that it was the only one remaining in a private collection. The text is in the Persian writing of the poet-scientist.

Another interesting work in the collection is one of the two copies in the United States of the book of Al-Khowarizim, a Persian, who used the word algebra for the first time. There are also 3,000 portraits of mathematicians, said to be the largest number in one collection.

MARY ELLIS TO KEEP ROLE.

Hammerstein Drops Suit to Prevent Her Acting in "The Dybbuk."

The injunction suit brought by Arthur Hammerstein to restrain Miss Mary Ellis from appearing in "The Dybbuk" on the ground that her appearance was a violation of the contract held by the producer of "Rose-Marie" with the former star of that production, who quit to give her voice a rest, has been dropped, it was announced yesterday. Miss Ellis will continue in her present rôle until the end of its run, and then return to Mr. Hammerstein's management in a new dramatic production.

A conference between the interested parties had been held prior to the hearing of the case before Supreme Court Justice Crain, as a result of which it was decided that she would not injure her voice in her present rôle.

Lumber Output in 1925 Set a Record

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1 (AP).—Lumber production set one of America's 1925 records, the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association announced today, placing the country's output for the year "slightly larger" than for any year since 1916. On the basis of weekly soft wood reports made to it by 350 of the larger mills, the association said 12,428,809,277 feet was produced, against 11,828,948,847 in 1924.

PUSH PLAN TO BUILD INDUSTRIAL MUSEUM

CITY WOULD COOPERATE

$50,000 Bequest by Henry R. Towne and His $2,000,000 Endowment Fund to Be Available.

Action of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York looking toward the establishment of an Industrial Museum for New York City is to be taken at a meeting to be held on Jan. 7, it was announced yesterday. The proposal for the museum will be presented in a report by the Committee on Commercial Education.

The idea of a museum was first suggested to the Chamber in 1912, and in 1913 Jacob H. Schiff offered $500,000, which was the amount estimated as needed to erect a building. The plan was to have the museum conducted on the same relationship with the City Government as the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the American Museum of Natural History. The World War caused the project to go into desuetude, but not before there had been incorporated The Association for the Establishment and Maintenance for the People in the City of New York of Museums of the Peaceful Arts.

The report to be placed before the Chamber by Dr. John H. Finley, Chairman of the Committee on Commercial Education, after reciting that the war blocked plans, continues:

It was no practicable for a numb of years to make any material progress to ward the accomplishment of the object, but in 1924, Henry R. Towne, one of its incorporators, who was deeply interested in the project, bequeathed the sum of $50,000 to the association, stating his earnest hope and expectation that this bequest, if wisely and promptly expended, would serve to initiate the public movement for the creation in this city of a group of buildings designed to constitute museums of the peaceful arts. Mr. Towne also provided in his will that his residuary estate, estimated to be in excess of two million dollars, be likewise turned over to the association, as an endowment fund at such time as his executors have reached a decision that the conditions, management and prospects of said museums in their opinion justify the establishment of the fund.

With this generous bequest as an inspiration, the trustees of the museums of the peaceful arts are actively undertaking the preparation of plans for the early establishment of the museum. They have reason to believe that the city authorities look favorably upon the project and will cooperate to the extent of providing an adequate site for the buildings. Many men prominent in the financial and industrial world have indicated their enthusiastic approval and support, and it is confidently expected that the Museum of the Peaceful Arts will soon be an accomplished fact, and will in time equal in importance and usefulness our great Museums of Art and Natural History.

Your committee, therefore, respectfully recommends the adoption of the following resolutions: be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, believing that the establishment of a museum as described in the foregoing would be of great and lasting value to the city, reaffirms its previous action as to the necessity and value of a commercial museum or museums and strongly recommends to the members of the Chamber and to others interested, their support of the project; and be it further

Resolved, That the Chamber's Committee on Commercial Education be and it is hereby authorized to cooperate with the trustees of the Association for the Establishment and Maintenance for the People in the City of New York of Museums of the Peaceful Arts, in any way which may appear practicable, looking toward the establishment of a commercial and industrial museum in the City of New York.

Twelve dashing, singing gondoliers arrived yesterday on the French liner De Grasse from Havre wearing their picturesque black sombreros and smart clothes. They are on their way from Venice to the Miami Biltmore Hotel and Country Club, where their twelve gondolas have preceded them to the Florida canals. Rooms had been reserved for the Venetians at the Hotel Commodore and a big sightseeing car chartered to take them round the city.

Unfortunately, the bonding house, which was to put up twelve bonds of $500 each as a guarantee that the gondoliers would return to their native land when the season at Miami closes, omitted to lodge them at Ellis Island with the Immigration Commissioner. Instead of touring the gayly lighted streets of New York the gondoliers remained on the De Grasse. At 8 A. M. today they will be taken in taxicabs to the Battery and over the ferry to Ellis Island to await the arrival of the brokers with the twelve bonds. When Immigration Commissioner Henry H. Curran releases them the gondoliers will be taken to the pier to embark for another sea trip to Miami.

The boatmen said the gondola business was as good in Venice last Summer as it ever had been and the city was full of American tourists all the time. They did not fear being put out of business by motorboats, as the boatmen of Venice, passenger and freight, number several thousands and have a strong vote in municipal affairs, they said. The gondoliers' union, they said, had been powerful enough to prevent the Government from filling in many of the canals and converting them into streets.

U. of P. Gets Gift of $250,000.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 1 (AP).—A gift of $250,000 for the erection of a medical clinic building at the University of Pennsylvania from Martin Maloney, Philadelphia capitalist and philanthropist, has been announced by President Josiah H. Penniman of the university. The money will be used, President Penniman explained, as the nucleus of a fund for the construction, within the next three years, of the new building, which is expected to cost approximately $750,000.

That cold may turn into "Flu," Grippe or, even worse, Pneumonia, unless you take care of it at once.

Rub it on with your finger-tips. You will feel a warm tingle as it enters the pores, then a cooling sensation that brings welcome relief.
